BISMARCK MEMORIAL UNVEILED IN BERLIN

Many Foreigners, Including American Tourists, Present---Von Buelow's Oration Surprised the Emperor.

Berlin June 22 This has been a week of speeches and regattas favored during the last half by fine sunny weather It began with the unveiling of the Bismarck memorial in front of the reichstag building Sunday which drew to Berlin scores of thousands of people from every part of Germany and many thousand foreigners including many American tourists Count von Bülow's oration on that occasion greatly irritated the emperor because the whole tone differed from his majesty's conception of Bismarck's achievements in which the emperor only sees a servants doings at his master's direction This his majesty again emphasized at the time by the inscription on the wreath deposited at the foot of the statue in his behalf It read To the great emperors great servant Whereas at the unveiling of the Bismarck statue the emperor did not open his lips his majesty made two noteworthy addresses at Cuxhaven and at Kiel the former being the more important The emperor itself Count von Bülow's panegyric for herself a place in the sunshine and dwelt emphatically on German commercial and national expansion The Liberal press has contended that it is impossible to grant the Agrarian demands which imply that the renewal of the commercial treaties will be rendered most difficult The Agrarian press has denied this cautiously and the Conservative press has left silence The whole press was agreeably affected by the emperor's statement that peace is now secured for a number of years to come The Cologne Volks Zeitung today critically reviews his majesty's Cuxhaven speech and says

The emperor has by his visitor corroborated what is claimed by the Center namely that the China expedition has been a total failure for if the Chinese war is really ended what has German achieved by it?

Not even the minimum of her actual military and certainly not the enlargement of her Chinese possessions nor has it brought harmony among the powers of China It is notorious that there have been almost constant wrangling and jealousies among them It would have been better if Germany had alone punished China for Baron von Ketteler's death No power could have objected and the punishment would then have been adequate to the enormity of the crime

The so called Kiel week which began Thursday has thus far been interesting although the weather has been unsatisfactory Yesterday the great yacht race all of the 44 yachts contesting were became delayed when but a few hundred yards from the goal after three hours spent in sailing The emperor who had previously steered the empress yacht the Iduna came in fourth losing a prize His majesty entered a protest against the winner the Corsair but the judges decided against him The fact is the best boats have been unable to show their speed points because of the unfavorable wind conditions Another French steam yacht the Freya has entered the racer

ATTACK THE REVENUE LAW

Railroad Telegraph and Sleeping Car Companies Secure MANDAMUS AGAINST BOARD

Evidently the Beginning of Systematic Legal Fight by Corporations Against Tax Bill.

Special to the Gazette

Pueblo June 22 Judge Walter Dixon of the district court of Pueblo county today issued a peremptory writ of mandamus directing the state board of equalization to show cause July 8 why it should not be prohibited from assessing property belonging to the telegraph and telephone companies in this state of Colorado This writ was issued out of the district court upon petition of the Pueblo Railroad company and the Pueblo Smelting and Refining company

The petition is a direct attack upon the validity of the revenue law passed by the Thirty first legislature and the revenue law and other provisions repealed all other laws with reference to the assessment of railroads The writ of mandamus is predicated upon the theory that if the recent act of the legislature is unconstitutional the old law providing for a state board of equalization will remain in operation The state board of equalization was composed under the old law of the governor the state auditor the state treasurer the secretary of state and the attorney general It was their duty to meet once a year and assess the values of property owned by the railroad telegraph and telephone companies doing business in this state The writ requires them to perform these functions this year or to show cause why they should not do so

The issuance of a writ of mandamus in this proceeding is based upon an alleged violation of the rights of the A T & S F railroad the Pueblo and State Land Railroad company the C R I & P Ry Co the Colorado Midland Ry Co the Pullman Co the C S R the Crystal River Ry Co the Union Pacific Ry Co the Midland Terminal Ry Co the D & R G Ry Co the Burlington & Colorado Ry Co and the F C C & R G Ry Co represented by the following attorneys Charles J Gist Henry A Dubois F H Devine of Pueblo John M Waldron Albert J Fellows Rogers Cuthbert C Hills Dill & Whitted D C Beaman Teller & Dailey Henry M Blackmer Karl Shafer Wolcott & Vaile and C W Waterman The petition sets out in the first person the corporate existence of the petitioners and states that they are engaged in the operation of railroad companies in the state of Colorado

After reciting at some length the duties of the respondent the state board of equalization the petition avers that the respondents have failed and neglected and refused to act in pursuance of the law creating the board of equalization The petition further avers that this refusal is due to the alleged passage of the revenue law by the Thirty ninth General assembly which by its provisions abolishes the board

The petitioners state that they have complied with the provisions of the law requiring them to make statements of values and amounts of their real and personal property The allegation and averment are then made that the new revenue law is unconstitutional and void This claim is based upon the alleged irregularities accompanying the passage of the act It is claimed that the legislature passed the pretended revenue act two hours after the expiration of the 60 days limitation prescribed by the constitution for legislative session It is also stated in effect that the legislature never properly adopted the amendment to the act reported by the conference committee of both houses during the final hours of the session They based this statement upon the fact that the amendments submitted were never printed and engrossed by the clerk and that the senate never adopted the conference report The claim that the amendments were not printed is one of the principal features of the petition

Notwithstanding that the writ is returnable on July 8 it is not expected that arguments will be then submitted the court will probably set a future date for the submission of arguments and the filing of briefs Whatever the court may do in the matter it is anticipated that the question will not be settled until it has gone to the highest tribunal of the state

(By Associated Press)

Pueblo Colo June 22—The railroad, telegraph and sleeping car companies doing business in Colorado presented an application to the district court today attacking the validity of the revenue bill passed by the last general assembly and Judge Dixon granted an alternative writ against the state board of equalization which consists of the governor and treasurer and secretary of state

The petition of the railroad companies is very lengthy and is supported by a squadron of the most notable attorneys in the state It is very long and the purport of it is to ask that the court summon the state board to assess the property of the petitioners in the old way It sets forth that the board did meet on the first Monday in April according to law but did not assess the railroads on account of the new law house bill No 1

The petition states that this new law is clearly unconstitutional It describes the proceedings in the assembly at the time of the passage of the bill after midnight on the second of April and avers that the senate took no action upon the amendments submitted by the conference committee that the pretended amendments were never printed or read as required by the constitution The failure to print the amendments reported by the conference committee is dealt with at length in the petition and is assigned by the petitioners as one of the principal points of invalidity in the pretended passage of the bill

The mandamus issued by Judge Dixon requires that the board of equalization shall either meet and assess the property of the railroad companies in the manner heretofore customary or that it show cause why it should not do so

It is evidently the beginning of a systematic legal fight by the largest corporations in the state to annul the tax bill over which the legislature last winter spent three months of hard work and which is a radical departure from previous methods of taxation.

BIG CONTROVERSY OVER SEWER CONTRACT AWARD

Council Committee Will Make a Recommendation That Will Be Vigorously Opposed by Some of the Board.

The city council of Colorado Springs will tomorrow evening receive a report that promises to precipitate one of the fiercest controversies that has ever taken place in the local board of aldermen over a similar matter It is the report of the sewer committee of the bids opened at the last meeting of the council

The awarding of this contract for the construction of extensions to the city sewer system involves the expenditure of about $20,000 of money and the fight in the council is going to be over the allocation of the sewer committee's report on the bids with its accompanying recommendation

A meeting of the sewer committee was held Friday night to which the public was not invited Some of the bidders for the work are of the opinion that one or two other bidders were present but this cannot be stated with certainty It is asserted on perfectly reliable authority however that the report of the sewer committee to the council will recommend that the $20,000 job be given to another contractor than the one whose bid according to the specifications given the contractors to work upon is undoubtedly the lowest bid as submitted figures It is surprising that as a result of the figuring done at the meeting of the sewer committee Doyle & Schwartz whose bid on the job according to the specifications upon which all bids are supposed to have been based are low bidders by $247 91 beating Charles T Quinlan by this amount

The bids submitted to the council by the contractors during the meeting Monday night were based upon one specification alone The contractors submitted their figures on the work per lineal foot For instance there were bids on constructing 18 inch sewer per lineal foot 10 inch per lineal foot etc no contractor knowing how much of each kind of work there was to be done and the understanding being that the sewer committee and the city were in ignorance on the same subject The bids were submitted on the basis stated and Quinlan was low man as stated in the Gazette Tuesday morning this being conceded by all other bidders and J R Joyce being the next lowest bidder

The sewer committee met Friday night and decided upon the specifications of the different lines that are to be built and it is said will recommend that the contract be let to Doyle & Schwartz on the ground that according to these specifications they are the low bidders

The figures of the committee including specifications Doyle's figures and Quinlan's figures are as follows

Specifications	Doyle	Quinlan
0 in inch	$ 11 00
4 3 ft 1 in h	3 333 33
600 ft 10 inch	370 00
13 000 ft 8 inch	5 400 00	6 300 00
1 176 ft 6 inch	470 40	417 [illegible]
131 1 [illegible]	113 01	[illegible]
20 10x6 [illegible]	15 00	6 00
0 8x6 [illegible]	256 00	114 40
20 6x6 [illegible]	8 75	5 00
Totals	$11,197 40	$11 445 31
		$11 197 40
		$ 247 91

The question for the council to decide is whether the contract shall be awarded on the estimates given by the bidders based on the information that they had or as a result of investigation and calculation on information that they did not have If the former be the case Mr Quinlan is conceded to have the contract for the work If the latter basis of computation be approved by the council Doyle & Schwartz will construct the sewer extensions

The sewer committee will undoubtedly recommend the latter plan and endeavor to have the contract given to Doyle & Schwartz. In any event there will be a rousing controversy over the matter

PITTSBURG WAS VISITED BY A VERY DESTRUCTIVE STORM

Pittsburg June 22—The vicinity of Pittsburg was visited today by one of the fiercest storms known since the United States weather bureau has been established Within 48 minutes 1 00 inches of rain fell and during that time the lightning and thunder was almost continuous The wind was not high except in a contracted path a few hundred feet wide which swept like a tornado from Mokees Rocks through Allegheny a portion of the east end of Pittsburg and on to Wilmerding and Turtle Creek Three lives were lost during the storm Charles Marcus an Italian who was working in a sewer at Center and Euclid avenues when the rain came the sewer was a raging torrent in a moment and Marcus was torn away from his fellow workmen and probably carried through to the river

Great damage was done in the two cities and the suburbs east Conservative estimates place the loss at $2 000 The tornado at Allegheny struck the grand stand of the ball park and carried away bodily 150 feet of that structure and moved from its foundation the entire stand Two of the beams of the grand stand ploughed through the roof of a house on Robin on street going from the garret to the first floor carrying away a portion of a bed on which James Williamson was sleeping It is a miracle that no lives were lost in Allegheny

In the Brothers Run district the famous flood of 1894 was outdone except in the loss of life Fortunately the inhabitants of that district anticipated the trouble and when the torrent came which submerged the houses all of the occupants had fled

In Pittsburg Fifth avenue and Forbes street in the Soho district were completely blocked with great masses of dirt and stones washed from the hill and all street car service to and from the east end was suspended for about two hours The Point Breeze Presbyterian church was struck by lightning and the steeple together with a portion of the roof of the edifice was wrecked

At East Pittsburg Turtle creek was higher than ever known before but the inhabitants along its banks were warned by a Bessemer engine going over the route whistling and ringing its bell letting the people know of the danger The entire business portion of the town of Turtle Creek is under water tonight The creek on its rampage flooded the great works of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company at East Pittsburg

The Westinghouse officials expect to have the works running as usual within a few days

James Howard aged 16 years was struck on the head by a live wire at Duquesne and instantly killed

James Dunn aged 10 years died saving the life of his brother Harry, aged 7 years who had fallen into the creek at Braddock was carried away by the waters and drowned

GENERAL CAILLES IS CONVINCED OF THE WISDOM OF SURRENDER

Santa Cruz Province of Laguna Luzon June 22—In the course of an interview had with him by a representative of the Associated Press General Cailles the insurgent commander whose surrender is promised for Monday and who is now established in the former American headquarters at Pagsanjan said he was convinced of the wisdom of surrender and is satisfied of the liberal intention of the American authorities The town is full of armed and uniformed insurgents

General Cailles with 1 500 of General Cailles command fled to the mountains this morning being frightened by a rumor that Geronimo and others were to be hanged Cailles sent a detachment in pursuit of them and avers that they will return tomorrow He asserts that he will bring more than 500 rifles to Santa Cruz on Monday with 10 men for every rifle and declares that the 30 pesos received for each rifle will be given to the widows and orphans

General Cailles declines to be a candidate for governor and will return to Cavite where he is a landowner Colonel Guevarra rode with the representative of the Associated Press to Santa Cruz and presented to Colonel Sumner a program of the surrender ceremonies Frank Meeflin of the Thirty seventh infantry who deserted and since has been with the insurgents acting as lieutenant and Earl Gunther formerly a canteen keeper at Paete are with General Cailles command

PEARY ARCTIC CLUB WILL FITTOUT A PARTY UNDER BRIDGMAN

New York June 22—The Peary Arctic club of which President Morris K Jessup of the chamber of commerce is president and President Henry W Cannon of the Chase National bank treasurer has instructed its secretary Herbert L Bridgeman with the command of its expedition of 1901 the fourth of the series since Mr Peary departed on his attempt to attain the pole

Dr Frederick A Cook of Brooklyn surgeon of the first Peary expedition in 1891 and of the Belgian Antarctic expedition has accepted the position of surgeon The club has chartered steamer Erik is now on her way from London to St Johns N F where the captain and crew will be shipped and then she will proceed to Sydney C B for coal and supplies taking her departure from that port direct for the north about the middle of next month The Erik will take stores for one year to guard against starvation possible detention and will with authority from the Royal Greenland Trading company to land cattle at the most northern stations for any possible information of Peary The summer of 1901 is likely to mark the culmination of the work of the Peary club the entire members confident this year have been from the outset in Mr Peary's success are pledged to stand by him unfaltering to the end

Three years have elapsed since Mr Peary left America and two full seasons work has to be learned upon his return of the Erik More interesting in a personal and a dramatic way than the geographical work of Mr Peary is the fate of his wife and daughter and the steamer Windward from which nothing has been heard since her departure from Cape Haven Greenland Aug 20 1900 Expectations and instructions then were that the Windward with Mrs Peary and Miss Peary would return in the autumn and the hope now is that their detention was due to Mr Peary's orders and for reasons which were satisfactory to him

SUDDEN DEATH OF ADELBERT P. HAY

New Haven Conn June 23—Adelbert P Hay son of Secretary Hay and former consul to Pretoria was found dead on the sidewalk outside the New Haven house at 7 30 a m this morning

Hay retired to his room at 1 o'clock after spending the evening with friends in apparently excellent spirits

At 2 30 a passer by noticed the body of a prostrate man lying on the sidewalk of the College street side of the hotel The night clerk of the hotel was immediately summoned and recognized the young man as the one who registered as Adelbert P Hay There was considerable excitement about the hotel and a large body of students and graduates who are here for the commencement exercises soon gathered

A number of Hay's former classmates at Yale positively identified the young man

It is believed that Hay became ill and went to the window for air was overcome by a fit of dizziness and fell to the ground below

The medical examiner is now at the hotel viewing the body

Dr Bartlett the medical examiner stated that Mr Hay probably came to his death by an accident The clothes on the bed had been turned showing his intention to go to bed His clothes had been folded On the ledge of the window was found a partly burned cigarette This discovery leads to the belief that Hay had lighted a cigarette before retiring and went to the window to smoke it Whether he was seized with a fit of dizziness or fell asleep on the window ledge cannot be determined

There are no external injuries Medical Examiner Bartlett stated that the death was accidental Hay arrived at the hotel about 6 o'clock Saturday night and was assigned to room 4 located in the front of the hotel third story directly over the main entrance

Adelbert S Hay graduated from Yale in 1898 and had come here to attend his class triennial reunion He was out driving in the evening with a party of friends and classmates and on returning to his room left word to be called at 9 o'clock Sunday morning This was the last seen of him alive

Washington June 22—Adelbert S Hay succeeded Consul Macrum as the representative of this country at Pretoria South African republic early last year and served acceptably during the trying times of the Boer war winning golden encomiums despite his lack of diplomatic experience for the able manner in which he looked after the interest of Americans and preserved the friendship of British and Boers The friendship of Britain to avoid showing partiality to either side—a serious offense—because of his official position and his relationship to the American secretary of state it required the utmost nicety and tact He was instrumental in befriending Boer prisoners securing by personal appeal to the British commanders many concessions which greatly ameliorated the hardships of their lot Mr Hay returned home in March having resigned the position as consul

It was impossible to communicate with Secretary Hay or any member of his family tonight in reference to the death of his son

COUNCIL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT ON EXAMINATION

The finance committee of the city council will have several matters of considerable importance to bring before the council tomorrow evening chief of which will be a report on the progress the present status and the prospects in the investigation of the city's books and records that is now being made

It is a conservative estimate upon the time that will be required to say that the expert now at work on the city's books doing the best that can be done by himself and his assistant will require six months more before his work can be completed No one has expressed the opinion that any other expert could do the work any faster the trouble being that there is such a vast amount of detail work involved in ascertaining what it is the object of the audit to form There are hundreds of thousands of receipts to be checked over it being necessary to check each one over two or three times Fifty thousand warrants and 18 00 coupons are to be checked over and this routine will consume so much time that the finance committee will tomorrow night go before the council with a statement concerning the matter and with a recommendation for some means of reducing the expense incident to so long an examination under the present basis or with a request for advice and suggestions from other members of the council as to what is best to be done

It is said that the expert will ask for more assistance in the work with a view to shortening the time necessary to the completion of this detail work but the finance committee has made no statement as to what it is going to request or suggest in the matter

FOURTEENTH AMERICAN DERBY WAS WON BY ROBERT WADDELL

Chicago June 22—Thirty thousand people saw Virginia Bradley's Alohoa gelding Robert Waddell at 12 to 1 in the betting win the fourteenth American Derby at Washington park track today by one length in 2 33 4 5 record time for the race

Few in the surging cheering throng had backed a comparatively friendless animal to capture the rich stake from the horses of the eastern and western millionaires yet never since the day that the grand Molesty took the first American Derby has the tumultuous cheering the genuine ovation given to horse and rider been equaled in this state

Jockey Bullman to whom fell the honor of taking two Derbys in succession was swept into a human maelstrom after he had dismounted and verified his weight He was boosted upon the shoulders of men and a detail of Pinkerton had to be called to clear the admiring cheering throngs from the course As for the earnest plebeian racing tool Robert Waddell he refused to permit attendants to tie upon his back the gigantic floral saddle that the club had provided for the winner Terminus W T Shaffer's Blazes colt was a good second while the favorite R T Wilson's grand looking Longstreet colt The Parader was a tired third Frank Farrell's Bonnibert that shared with The Parader at one time the honors of favorite failed to run his race and was fourth His Eminence, purchased by Clarence M Mackay and groomed for a victory in the classic had a bad start but under Jockey Odom's terrific riding at the end landed in fifth position Sannazarro Six Shooter Beau Gallant, Silverdale and Sadie S finished in the order named behind His Eminence

[illegible] race with the opinion of every unprejudiced spectator The Parader fast as the wind in the Derby that induced his owner to ship him from New York to the Washington park track at the eleventh hour was seventh away at the drop of Starter Dwyer's red flag after the field had made one false break Piggott had orders to make a killing pace He at once took the favorite to the front and there The Parader remained until the stretch was reached Piggott is a strong rider but he did not figure upon all of the problems that were known to Jockey John Bullman who rated his mount into second place and kept Robert Waddell within striking distance until the head of the stretch Bullman had been the most disconsolate on the big track an hour and a half before the Derby was run Then it seemed to him that he would not have a moment in the race although last year on Sidney Lucas he had won the race Engaged to ride Bonnibert and displaced when the eastern owner obtained the service of Jockey Nash Turner from W C Whitney, Bullman was discouraged

Early in the day J W Schorr owner of Lady Schorr engaged him to pilot the filly in the mile and a half event But the veterinary declared against the starting of this speedy daughter of Esher and once more Bullman was in the cold Friends who knew his riding ability worked hard to secure a mount for him Virginia Bradley was undecided between Van Dusen and See for the mount on his entry He had heard from the pool room men that Bullman might not try to win This decided the quaint southerner Calling Bullman an hour before the bugle summoned the animals to the post he offered $7 000 if he would win with Robert Waddell Bullman was fixed at last. Frank Farrell told him that he could not straighten the tangle and tendered the jockey $500 for his humiliation With this roll of bills in his jockey boot and Virginia Bradley's promise of twice as much money as Jim Cushing had given the famous Snapper Garrison for piloting Boundless winner in the $50 000 World's fair Derby Bullman's friends said he could not lose the race

There were 57 bookmakers at the track and they did a big business at all of the races without interference by the authorities Bullman's presence on Bradley's gelding caused considerable picking of the 12 to 1 shot but the bulk of the public speculation was on the more fashionable animals. The Parader held firm at 3 to 1, Bonnibert opened at 3½ to 1 and receded a half point Beau Gallant was backed at 6 to 1 Boundless and Sarannita had held the honors for speed in the American Derby with 2 36 to their credit.

The fractional time by eighths today was 13 [illegible] 38 1-5 49 2-5 1 02 3-5 1 15 2-5 1 28 1-4 1 54 2-5 [illegible] 2 19 and 1 2 33 4-5

Mr Bradley always races under the name of his wife His share of the purse was $19 000.

Terminus won $3 000 and The Parader got $2 000 which about paid the expenses of the colt's long trip

It was 3 50 when the horses came out of the paddock to parade before the stand In two minutes they were at the post They got away 11 minutes later after one false break Sannazarro showed first a neck ahead of Six Shooter Bonnibert was third Beau Gallant fourth The Parader fifth Terminus sixth Robert Waddell seventh Silverdale eighth Sadie S. ninth and His Eminence tenth and last

Rounding the turn the positions were not altered much except that Piggott took The Parader into the lead to set the pace that may have been the colt's undoing

Passing the stand for the first time the field was well in hand with The Parader a length ahead of Robert Waddell who had dropped into second position without any jostling or crowding Waddell was two lengths ahead of Sadie S Bonnibert was fourth and running lazily, Terminus was fifth two lengths ahead of Silverdale Six Shooter was a neck in front of Sannazarro who was a length ahead of Beau Gallant His Eminence was still last.

Turning into the back stretch The Parader had increased his lead to three lengths, while Waddell hung on nicely two lengths ahead of Bonnibert. Sadie S and the others behind appeared to be rated according to orders At the half pole The Parader still had his lead of two lengths and Waddell was still in second place running kindly while Terminus had moved into third place The pace began to tell at the far turn and The Parader's lead was cut down by the truer running Waddell who answering to Bullman's call increased the daylight between himself and Terminus to four lengths.

Straightening out for the drive in the stretch the horses gave an inkling of the final result of the race "Parader is beaten" came from the throats of thousands Bullman is going after him as Waddell passed the crack eastern colt and Bullman never had any doubt of his victory

The Parader was two lengths before Terminus with the tired or sulky Bonnibert fourth three lengths ahead of His Eminence on whom Odom was making one of his whirlwind finishes The remainder of the field was beaten off Down to the wire and under it flashed the winner Waddell still full of running, a length ahead of Terminus who just snatched second place from The Parader by a neck The Parader was five lengths ahead of Bonnibert and the remainder of the field straggled under the wire just ahead of the surging crowd that broke out of the infield and over the fences to greet the equine hero and his popular jockey, Bullman

Mr. Shields' Strange Three Man Fire-Arm

A few days ago there was exhibited in Strange's window a gun owned by Mr. John G. Shields which is interesting both as a relic and as a relic of the recent trouble in China. The gun which is known as a Chinese three man gun was captured at the siege of Peking by an American soldier. When the soldier arrived in San Francisco he grew tired of his cumbersome weapon and sold it to an acquaintance of Mr. Shields, through whom he secured it recently when in California. The rifle resembles in general appearance an old style Springfield piece. It is seven and one-half feet long, the length of the barrel being about five and a half feet. The rifle is a muzzle loader and is fired by means of a cap. The bore of the weapon is about three-fourths of an inch [illegible] fired through it is a round ball of iron. In action three men are required to operate the gun, one loading and ramming home the charge, a second acting as a rest—the piece passing over one shoulder—and the third man discharging the piece.

Mr. Shields now has the rifle hung in his office where he has many other curios collected from all parts of the world.

Hard Expiation for an Awful Crime

Mr. H. I. Myton, the government agent for the Ute Indians, has been in the city for the past few days. In speaking of his work among the Indians of Utah, Mr. Myton said that there are three tribes in the Uintahs, White Rocks and Uncompahgres. The chief of the Uintahs is Tabby, an Indian 90 years old and totally blind. With all his infirmities, his mind is still active and he rules the tribe with a firm hand. Sowatch, 90 years of age, is chief of the White Rock tribe and Cavanah, another aged chief, leads the Uncompahgres. Mr. Myton tells a very strange story of an old Indian who many years ago, when a young man, murdered his mother.

The tribe granted the young fellow his life but only on the condition that he never should return under penalty and that he never should wear a clothing.

Many times, said Mr. Myton, have I seen the Indian now [illegible] and broken in health, lying out in the snow with not a shred of clothing on him. Often the Indians of the tribe have gone to him in the morning and met his half-blood son from an adjoining office. If any one approaches the tribe covers his head with a small blanket he carries in his hand. Indians seldom speak with him. Twice a day his brothers carry food to him—food of the plainest sort. He never shaves nor does he fill out his whiskers, according to the Indian custom, but wears a long gray beard. Mr. Myton left the city yesterday for Vernal, returning to his duties.

Special to the Gazette

Omaha Neb June 22—The home team and Colorado at Vinton park were crowded to their utmost capacity this afternoon to witness the first game of this series with Colorado Springs. The game was a walkaway after it was discovered that for different feeling from the early leaders in the day. The first half all were it was a catch game. It was for the Millionaires. Five hundred rooters were the main features of Omaha's defeat.

When the locals went to bat in the first all the over in Hale Cooper's lively little home a nice little tally. Hulen obtained a base on balls and looks as certain for they stopped right there.

It was one two three and Cooper followed the fourth while Shaw Lowe and Holland all crossed the plate for the visitors.

The game looked sick.

Hope was revived a little when Hulen brought home a run in Omaha's half of the first. It was then enough.

It was back as usual the Colorado when Lowe and Holland repeated the performance of the first with Hulen bagger brought in three more tallies. That settled it for two as the Millionaires were by who to score once more. McAndrews lined a single in the final run in the first half of the eighth. The score

ARRANGING FOR FIREWORKS

Another Big Feature Seems Assured for the Jubilee---The Committee's Meeting.

The Elks committee which is arranging for the street fair for the Quartocentennial celebration held a conference yesterday at the chamber of commerce with the centennial committee. The Elks have about determined to run the fair, but the proposition has not yet been ratified by the lodge. The committee is going ahead with the arrangements.

At yesterday's meeting the Elks announced that they had about decided to hold the fair on four blocks on Cascade avenue. The fair will be open from 1 o'clock until late in the afternoon, and from 7 to 11 at night.

The centennial committee has promised to provide a fine band for the fair, so that there will be music within the enclosure every afternoon and evening. The chamber of commerce yesterday bought the first booth, where badges and tickets to the ostrich farm will be sold. Mr. Belfield, manager of the farm, has agreed to give the Centenial association a percentage from the sale of tickets.

One of the important features for the jubilee will soon be arranged for by the committee. It has been decided to have a grand display of fireworks on one of the evenings of the celebration. A Colorado Springs man who was formerly connected with the Payno company has asked the committee to produce the pyrotechnical display known as the "Battle of San Juan Hill." If this is done the fireworks will be one of the most pleasing parts of the program.

A committee, consisting of R. P. Davis, Gilbert McClurg and George Rex Buckman was appointed yesterday to look after electric lighting and special street illuminations. It was also decided to ask the city council to provide more adequate street sprinkling facilities during the jubilee.

TWO NEW BRIDGES AND NEW PARKS

Structures Will Soon Span Monument Creek---Plans for a Great Park.

The new bridge over the Monument on Huerfano street will not be completed before the 1st of August. The preliminary survey for the bridge at Willamette avenue will be made this week and the work of cutting the street through south of the old Hagerman place will be started shortly. As soon as the approaches are prepared for the bridge at Willamette and the new Huerfano street bridge is constructed the old Huerfano street bridge will be moved north and put in place at Willamette. These bridges will satisfy a want which has long been felt by the people west of the Rio Grande tracks and will give them an entrance at the center of the new park system in the Monument bottom.

Yesterday the first steel of the new Huerfano street bridge was laid on a temporary structure. The concrete is not hard enough yet to support the bridge and it will rest on a temporary structure until it can be lowered to the concrete bases.

The bridge will be 58 feet in width. There will be an eight-foot sidewalk on either side, with a 40-foot driveway between. There will be double car tracks on this driveway and the service on the Manitou line will be greatly aided in this way, as cars will not have to wait on the viaduct while other cars are coming across the bridge.

Between Willamette avenue and Boulder street the city owns an extensive tract known as Willow park, and north of Willamette, extending as far as Washburn Field, the Colorado Springs company has recently cleared the ground and made great preparations for another park. When complete, these parks, lying along the banks of the Monument, will form one of the most beautiful spots in this vicinity.

One thing, however, is badly needed to improve the looks of this locality—that is a new bridge for the Mesa road. Nearly every spring when the Monument rises after the heavy rains in the mountains, the crippled wooden structure across the stream at the Mesa road sails down with the flood and a couple of weeks' labor is required before the road is open for traffic again. Almost every tourist who comes to the city, either in going to Manitou or in returning, drives over the Mesa road, and not infrequently surprise is expressed that the city does not put in a more durable and respectable looking structure. For a comparatively small amount a concrete steel bridge could be built there which would satisfy a great want now and be in keeping with the beauty of the parks, which will soon draw great crowds to that vicinity.

KENYON HAS BOUGHT THREE NEW DOGS

Mr. J. S. Kenyon has recently purchased three more hounds to add to his kennel. From Mr. A. L. Weston he has secured Perfect Lady, Sporting Lady and Tini Donahue, the last being named for the well-known catcher of the Millionaires. Mr. Kenyon will enter a number of his best hounds in the coursing meets soon to be held at Gillett.

POOR APPETITE

means disordered digestion, and if not promptly attended to will develop into chronic dyspepsia. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will improve the appetite by strengthening the stomach, and cure indigestion, constipation, general debility, nervousness, sleeplessness, and all disorders arising from an impaired digestion. DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION

"I had been a sufferer for many years from nervousness with all its symptoms and complications," writes Mrs. O. N. Fisher, 1861 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. "I was constantly going to see a physician or purchasing medicine. In the spring of 1897 my husband induced me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After taking one bottle and following your advice I was so encouraged that I took five more bottles, and then stopped for several weeks as I felt so much better, but still I was not completely cured. I commenced taking it again and felt that I was improving faster than at first. I am not now cross and irritable, and I have a good color in my face; have also gained about ten pounds in weight and one thousand pounds of comfort, for I am a new woman once more and your advice and your 'Favorite Prescription' is the cause of it, coupled with the 'Pleasant Pellets' which are not to be dispensed with. I took eight bottles of the 'Prescription' the last time, making fourteen in all, and will not take any more unless you so advise, for I do not see as I need it."

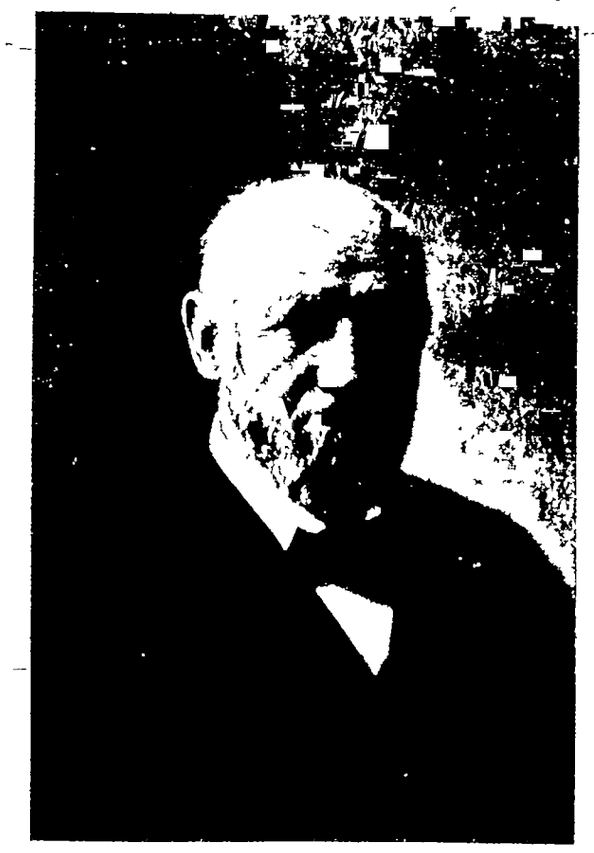
The Legislature and the Corporations

By JUDGE JAMES B. BELFORD

IF ANY RELIANCE is to be placed on the statements contained in the public press there one fairly entitled in believing that a formidable combination of diverse corporations is in process of incubation having in view the overthrow of the revenue bills enacted by the last general assembly and the rendering nugatory certain acts designed to ameliorate the condition of the laboring class throughout the state. The constitution has let the flesh of these corporations and every act passed by the legislature especially when it trenches on certain preconceived ideas which self interests and greed have evolved must have its orthodoxy adjudged before it can meet with their acceptance. The peculiar incidents attending the eight hour law controversy have not been forgotten by thoughtful and fair minded men. That litigation left an unpleasant memory behind it. Few regret the attorney's approve of the method whereby that litigation was instituted. Still fewer approve the unseemly haste by which it was forced into court and still fewer regard the decision reached as either sound or just. Nor have they forgotten that preceding the holding of the state convention last year certain well paid agents of the corporations with boodle in their pockets were sent throughout the state to enlist the country press and other political agencies in support of the nomination of a certain candidate for supreme judge who public opinion were believed to be in entire consonance with those sought to be enforced by the men laboring to secure his continuance in power.

With these facts—before us we must be pardoned if we doubt the disinterested character of the zeal that certain gentlemen are making ready to display for the constitution. When the validity of a revenue law is assailed the reasons for its overthrow in a style of the most strenuous and extraordinary kind. The revenues are the props on which the stability and efficiency of the state depend. As surely as an army travels on its belly so surely does the state travel on the taxes paid into its coffers and the man who questions the power of legislature to impose needful taxes on all taxable objects must be prepared to show in the most clear and humble fashion just where and how the legislature has exceeded its power or abused its rights. Every presumption is in favor of the power and the legislature is as omnipotent within its sphere of action as the British parliament save where its power is restricted by the constitution expressly or by necessary implication. It is not required to look to the constitution to ascertain what powers have been granted. It looks there simply to see what powers have been withheld. The taxing power is political in its nature. Its exercise belongs wholly to the legislative division and its extent is measured only by the necessities of the government. Everyone knows that when the general assembly met last winter the state was in the very throes of bankruptcy. The governor had practically proclaimed the fact. The distressed condition of educational and eleemosynary institutions was cited. The appointment of a special revenue commission confirmed it. What then was the duty of the legislature? Clearly to supply the needed funds, restore the financial credit of the state and devise some system that would distribute equally and fairly the burdens to be borne.

No legislative body is infallible or perfect. It is a part of humanity and partake of its infirmities. Notwithstanding the fact that the last legislature has been made the object of partisan rancor and hatred still judging it by what it accomplished and what it tried to accomplish it is rightly entitled to be considered as fair a representative a body as has ever assembled under the dome of the state capital. The offensive boss with his tainted fingers and polluted mouthpiece was conspicuously absent. That certain acts passed by it were afterwards vetoed is not to its discredit. What I mean to say is that if the ends it aimed at were in the right direction and what it did do correct it redounded to its own honor and to the prosperity of the whole state. But my object in writing this article is not to make it to uphold the legislature as it is to call public attention to some matters relating to labor and the laboring class growing out of recent legislation. And first it is well to remember that in the United States there are twenty millions of people who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. People who toil in the mines, in the field, in the forges and factories and to this number may be added millions more engaged in transportation and kindred pursuits. This vast body of toilers represents intelligence and in fact the conservative element of this mighty nation. Of course at times there are riots and difficulties and strikes. But compare if you please the number engaged in the strife with the millions of toilers who peacefully and orderly carry from day to day their contributions to the world's progress and see how few as compared with the great mass are engaged in publicly expressing their discontent with prevailing conditions. The mental constitution and racial instincts of our people lead them to seek progress through orderly methods. Of course violent revolutions now and then will take place but all that is good in the old customs and institutions is religiously preserved. Much of the material used in the old edifice is transplanted into the new and thus renovated from time to time the world's march is comfortably along towards its appointed end. It is with the toiling and conservative millions that the word its peace and prosperity has to do. Of all the virtues justice is easily the supremest one and it is to see to justice that governments are ordained. When they fail in this respect they fail altogether.—[illegible] progress made by the laboring class during the last three centuries has been simply marvelous. Take any path you please and count the milestones of progress along it. In the reign of the great Elizabeth many laborers still belonged to the soil on which they dwelt or worked; they were simply serfs, and when the estate was sold they passed with it to the new purchaser. At the close of the eighteenth century those who worked in the mines were compelled to remain in the pits as long as the owners chose to keep them at work there and they were sold as part of the capital invested in the works. If they accepted an engagement elsewhere they were brought back and flogged as thieves for having attempted to rob the owner of the labor. Such was English law until 1799 and so late as 1806 everyone wishing to labor in France was compelled to obtain a license. How wonderful the change that has taken place during the last hundred years. The laborer today is practically free and able to assert and maintain his rights against all challengers. Capital and labor are coming to realize that they are independent forces and that the prosperity of one rests on the prosperity of the other.



HON. JAMES B. BELFORD

Notwithstanding this fact however it is clear that the relations of capital and labor have not yet reached an equilibrium that will insure a continuous peace. Hours of labor have not yet been agreed on, the efficiency of cooperation has not yet been fully determined and arbitration as a solvent has not yet been fully accepted. These questions are in the [illegible] and must be settled before the leaders of the world can find basis on which future calculations can be safely made. Both capital and labor must extricate themselves from the realm of intellectual anarchy in which they have been moving for so long a time. A fundamental idea must be reached and accepted by both sides before we can hope for the disappearance of those disturbing influences that now occasion general solicitude. These fundamental ideas may be evolved out of the sheer progress of civilization they may flash forth as sparks from the fires of conflict now raging they may grow out of a rebirth of those primitive [illegible] that centuries ago changed in the most radical fashion the then existing methods and institutions of a pagan and oppressed world. That they will be evolved and accepted no one believing in the divinities of the Christ can doubt.

Compare the conditions of affairs today with those existing 50 years ago. Then the civilized world was in a state of absolute unrest. Riots existed and strikes prevailed in the industrial centers of France, Belgium, England and throughout a great portion of the United States but they were not unattended with good results for the employers manifested a willingness to discuss economic questions with their employes and to at least inquire into the grievances of which they complained. Public sentiment became a potent factor in the settlement of these controversies. Capital began to recognize that labor of itself was organized and was entitled to a hearing and would have one. The leading magazines of the country opened their columns to the discussion of labor questions and employers of labor like Andrew Carnegie devoted their time and ability to discussing methods whereby bitterness and rancor might be allayed, misunderstandings corrected and amicable relations re-established. It was then conceded that labor had the right to organize the same as capital. Trades unionism was accepted by many employers and labor urged as far as it could be made legally effective and the wisdom of shortening the hours of labor fairly examined into and many grievances adjusted.

From one of the articles written by Mr. Carnegie and published in the Forum April 1895 I take the following extract which I especially commend to the attention of those who are so bitterly opposed to the labor legislation passed by the last general assembly. It is astonishing, he says, how small a sacrifice upon the part of the employer will sometimes greatly benefit the men. I remember [illegible] of meetings with the committee it was incidentally remarked by one speaker that the necessity of obtaining credit at the stores in the neighborhood was a great tax on the men. An ordinary workman, he said, could not afford to maintain himself and his family for a month and as he only received his pay monthly he was compelled to obtain credit and pay exorbitantly for everything whereas if he had the cash he could buy at 20 per cent less. Why I said why cannot we overcome that by paying every two weeks? The reply was that we did not like to ask it because we have always understood that it would cause much trouble but if you do that it will be worth an advance of five per cent on our wages. We have paid semi monthly since that time.

The above is one instance out of many others that might be cited of how a big brained and Christian hearted man can assuage many of the troubles that now exist between the employer and the employed. In the plan adopted by Mr. Carnegie in 1886 and pursued by him ever since I believe and wiser plan to follow than the one suggested of rushing into court and asking some judge to declare the law which sanctions Mr. Carnegie's plan unconstitutional. Will not the general welfare of the state be better advanced by the one method than by the other? Cannot the employer advance his own interests and those of the public by evincing some slight spirit of accommodation? What principle of justice is violated by semi monthly payments? Is not the question one of convenience more than one of the constitution? On which side of this controversy will public sentiment array itself and cannot Colorado follow a precedent set by Pennsylvania? These are matters gentlemen to be considered and dispassionately considered before you venture forth on an angry ocean of legal warfare. Again it might be well to remember that a foreign corporation can do business in this state only on such terms as the legislature shall see fit to prescribe. Is there not some danger in playing with edged tools? Suppose some additional burden has been imposed by the new revenue law, is it not the very part of wisdom to temporarily carry this burden in anticipation of a general war against a revenue system that was produced by the most over ruling necessities? Will popular hostility to corporate exactions be placated by organizing an assault on the very means on which the state depends for its existence?

How long do you think a few men representing a fractional portion of the wealth of the state and another few representing a fractional portion of the population of the state will be permitted to endanger its vast interests and menace the peace of the community by haggling over mere percentages or quarreling over the question as to whether payments shall be made on the fifteenth or thirtieth day of the month? It is rapidly coming to be understood that the public has a vital interest in all questions which in any way affect the peace and security. All interests are so intimately interlaced that disturbance in any one of them produces demoralization in all of the others. The smelter strike two years ago made every business nerve in the state tingle because it affected the mines, the railroads, the merchants, the farmers, the day laborer and in fact everybody. The discordance existing between a few smelters and their workmen came near paralyzing the entire state. When such results spring up out of individual differences has not the general public some interest in the settlement of these matters and will it not insist that these controversies shall be settled on principles of justice? As remarked above the natural instincts of the Anglo Saxon favor orderly progress. He is disposed to dictation, oppression and insolence. Public sentiment is a powerful arbiter in all disputed questions and it is rarely on the wrong side of any question that affects the economic welfare of the people.

In the article from which I quoted above Mr. Carnegie says: I consider that of all the agencies immediately available to prevent wasteful and embittering contests between capital and labor arbitration is the most powerful and beneficial. He adds further: I have noticed that the manager who confers oftenest with a committee of his leading men has the least trouble with his workmen. It is the chairman situated hundreds of miles away from his men who only pays a flying visit to the works and perhaps finds time to walk through the mill or mine once or twice a year that is chiefly responsible for the disputes that break out at intervals.

These are golden words and as true as they are golden. The day when misunderstandings can be settled by violence has passed away. He who uses force must stand ready to justify it by the hollest of reasons or he will suffer the most sweeping condemnation. And he who seeks by the exercise of undue influence or through the agency of trickery or technicality, to deprive people of their substantial rights cannot expect a better fate. You all recall the Chicago riots which were brought about by Pullman who refused to arbitrate the case of his distressed workmen. The officers of the regular army who were brought to Chicago by order of President Cleveland met at one of the hotels and denounced the policy of using the army to perpetuate wrongs and by doing so to degrade itself in the eyes of the people. They went further and denounced among themselves the advisers of the president who had sent them on such a mission. These things were carefully withheld from the public but such are the facts. This incident is pregnant with most extraordinary meaning. What then is the wise course to pursue in the present emergency? Is it for the corporations to follow the advice of their attorneys and appeal to judge [illegible] whose resources have made them rich and powerful? Is it for the corporations to say to the workmen: It is not your needs but our pleasure that must determine the time when your wages must be paid? This matter gentlemen is up to you. Precipitate an extra session of the legislature if you desire but be ready abundantly ready to accept the results, for they will not be what you anticipate. The reign of the boss in Colorado's legislative halls is over at least for the present.

CORPORAL WILLIAM CURL AND HIS ILOCANO SCOUTS

Mr. William E. Curl, whose portrait appears in the center of the group above, has been detailed from the army and is now serving with the Ilocano scouts in northern Luzon. Mr. Curl, who was a student in Colorado college, enlisted in the army at the outbreak of the war and his efficient soldiering performance of duty soon won for him a corporal's chevrons. When the command with which he was serving, company K of the Thirty fourth volunteer infantry, was ordered home from the Philippines, Corporal Curl asked for his discharge that he might remain as a civilian in the islands. Immediately upon the receipt of his discharge he was engaged for service with the Ilocano scouts, a band of natives under American officers which has recently rendered valuable service in northern Luzon. Mr. Curl in a very entertaining and faithful letter to his mother describes his duties as a scout, his experience in dealing with his Filipino subordinates and the nature of the service they are performing for our government. He writes that he intends to start for Australia in July via Suez, Palestine and England.

THE FATHER DYER

Colorado's Loss in the Death of a Venerable Man of God---Humanity's Gain in His Life.

"Death to him is a brighter shine than shadow.

A tender pathos by loved is made

Rev. John L. Dyer, pioneer preacher and missionary of the Rocky mountain region, known throughout the west as the snowshoe itinerant, died last Sunday in Denver at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Noble Streator in University park. The funeral was held last Wednesday, and according to the wishes of Father Dyer, as he was lovingly called, the ceremonies were of a simplest nature. No sermon was preached. The pioneers of Colorado, among whom Father Dyer had spent nearly all his days, were his eulogists, for there is probably no man in the state who is more highly esteemed and sincerely loved than the gentle mannered, lofty minded Father Dyer. The body lay in state at Trinity Methodist church, where thousands of people paid their last loving reverence in tribute of the faith and loyalty of a departed friend and adviser. Father Dyer's favorite hymn was sung and a few old friends, many of whom had known him for over half a century, said a few words in memoriam. The body was taken to Castle Rock and buried beside his wife and son.

In the death of Father Dyer Colorado and the world loses a friend—for he was a friend to the desolate, the weary and the uncomforted, carrying words of cheer and blessing to all. Long before the first church spire pointed heavenwards in this state Father Dyer preached the gospel of love in this territory and blazed the way for christianity throughout the Rocky mountain region. Not a trace of the physical suffering, the hardships of hunger, heat and cold—not a shadow of the heart ache of isolation and loneliness that must often have been the sad portion of the pioneer was reflected in the strong, trusting face that had looked upon almost 90 years of life, and love and peace were reflected back to the world, and death was but the passing into the eternal light and truth which he had so constantly preached. His life had been one of well-doing to all mankind, indifferent of creed, color or circumstance. He was a godly man and a manly man. He traveled from camp to camp over the heights of wearying mountains and through the lengths of valleys, and everywhere his approach was hailed with gladness. To the tired and disappointed man whose fondly cherished hope of wealth had long since changed to stoical bitterness he brought that comfort which the world never could give.

He was a man of many scholarly attainments achieved solely through his own efforts. He began the service of spreading the gospel in 1843 in Wisconsin. From there he came to Denver on horseback in 1861 without a penny in his pocket, but with more than a fortune in energy and will. Father Dyer was of the militant type of preacher.

He was born March 30, 1811, and spent his early youth on the farm and in the lumber camps of northern Wisconsin and Michigan. Since 1844 he has been a member of the Colorado Methodist conference and only two years ago, while at the age of 87, he again made the tour of all the mining camps, many of which were now thriving towns, that he had once visited when the population was represented by a few hardy frontiersmen and their Indian neighbors. He was received everywhere like a beloved father or a patriarch. Parents and grandparents, whose children he had baptized, married and buried, again came to greet their old pastor and to look once more into the gentle face whose expression was always love and kindness.

When names were submitted for the windows of the capitol dome requests came from every part of the state urging that Father Dyer's portrait be permitted here with the galaxy of honor. The request was unanimously granted and Father Dyer's portrait will be among the rest of the pioneers who have builded up the great state of Colorado.

"His sobriquet 'Snow Shoe Itinerant' was earned on account of his travels over the Snowy range. In those days preaching was not so lucrative and Father Dyer carried the mails to Leadville over the Mosquito pass one of the most perilous routes in the state, preaching three times a week en route. On these journeys he endured untold hardships. At one time he was lost in a blizzard and froze both feet. But physical suffering was the least which he had to endure. His greatest grief was the cowardly shooting of his son J. E. Dyer at Leadville in 1875. Young Dyer was the probate judge of Lake county and on account of a decision which he rendered in a shooting affray between Harrington and Gibbs, he was shot from the back and instantly killed. Both men were tried but no one was ever convicted for the dastardly act. One of the last acts of Father Dyer's life was to pray for forgiveness for the two men. Years before he pronounced a vehement curse against them. Just before he died, as the last sacrament, was being administered, he feebly whispered: I forgive them—the men who killed my boy. Thus he died as he lived, with the precepts of the forgiving Savior in his heart.

Of such a life it may truly be said
O Death where is thy sting?
O Grave where is thy victory?

THE FIRST OF JUNE

And over the world a silver haze
Now have come the silling days
When field and wood are bedewy,
Blends the emerald with the blue

Now doth nature's cloak the land
In garments free from soil or stain—
The luxurious leaves the hills untanned
The vivid meads the glaucous grain

The day looks new, a coin unworn
Freshly stamped in heavenly mint
The sky has seen its look of morn
Of age and death there is no hint

How soft the landscape near and far!
A shining veil the trees infold
The day remembers noon and star
A silver lining hath its gold

Again I see the clover bloom
And wade in grasses lush and sweet
Again has vanished all my gloom

Again from out the garden hives
The exodus of frenzied bees
The humming cyclone onward drives
Or finds repose amid the trees

At dawn the river seems a lake
A liquid shadow deep as spice
But when the sun the mist has laid
A diamond shower smiles its face

The season's tide now reaches its height
And gives to earth an aspect new,
Every shoal is hid from sight
With current fresh as morning dew

GREETINGS

"As white as are the thoughts of her you love.

Our Way to Ride

When Ted Sloan first appeared on the English tracks people saw a mite of humanity, perched in 'scorching' position with the knees clamped to the horse's withers. His stirrups were so short that his chin almost brushed his knees and he had neither whip nor spurs. The English school and the old American school of jockeys sat straight in the saddle with long stirrups and punished the horse severely. The effect of Sloan's method was ludicrous and all England laughed. Now the jockeys over there try to imitate him.

There is sound logic in Sloan's monkey like riding. He takes all weight away from the horse's kidneys so that the hind or driving part of the animal is left free to impart rapid motion. Also by all slight is the shallower [illegible] of bouncing up and down thus racking the horse at every leap. He adjusts himself as part of the animal. By crouching over the animal's neck he diminishes the atmospheric resistance by more than a third. The Reiff brothers, Danny, Mather, Martin and all the young American jockeys here and abroad now ride in this fashion. Its value has been demonstrated in England where the first three named together with Sloan have carried off all racing honors for two seasons.

The Reiff boys are sons of an Ohio blacksmith. They have made $250,000 in a few years. They are notable among jockeys, not for having earned so much money but for having saved it, because the jockey is seldom frugal. His average pay in one season counting $25 for winning mounts and $10 for losing ones reaches a total amount of about $5,000. Against this sum must be charged fines and valet expenses. This is a minimum salary. Nowadays all good jockeys receive large retaining fees from their owners and in addition win a good deal through betting.

When a jockey retires from the saddle he does without having saved any money. His future is dismal. As a reaction from abnormal training he usually becomes very fat and sluggish and with no education seems unable to make a good living. Cal Rigl made famous in painting when he won the memorable Metropolitan Derby in 1889 now takes in washing with his wife at Coney Island. The man who was Uncle's attendant in those faraway days of triumph now receives $500 a week as a burlesque comedian. He is Charley Ross.

Mike Bergen tended bar for a long time and Pete Dunn one of the best jockeys this country has produced has a milk route in upper New York. A few like Jimmy McLaughlin are doing well as trainers and owners but the majority of these old time celebrities have slipped out of sight like the horses they rode.—(Allen Sangree, in Ainslee's.

ARRANGING FOR FIREWORKS

Another Big Feature Seems Assured for the Jubilee---The Committee's Meeting.

The Elks committee which is arranging for the street fair for the Quartocentennial celebration held a conference yesterday at the chamber of commerce with the centennial committee. The Elks have about determined to run the fair, but the proposition has not yet been ratified by the lodge. The committee is going ahead with the arrangements.

At yesterday's meeting the Elks announced that they had about decided to hold the fair on four blocks on Cascade avenue. The fair will be open from 1 o'clock until late in the afternoon, and from 7 to 11 at night.

The centennial committee has promised to provide a fine band for the fair, so that there will be music within the enclosure every afternoon and evening. The chamber of commerce yesterday bought the first booth, where badges and tickets to the ostrich farm will be sold. Mr. Belfield, manager of the farm, has agreed to give the Centennial association a percentage from the sale of tickets.

One of the important features for the jubilee will soon be arranged for by the committee. It has been decided to have a grand display of fireworks on one of the evenings of the celebration. A Colorado Springs man who was formerly connected with the Payne company has asked the committee to produce the pyrotechnical display known as the "Battle of San Juan Hill." If this is done the fireworks will be one of the most pleasing parts of the program.

A committee, consisting of R. P. Davis, Gilbert McClurg and George Rex Buckman was appointed yesterday to look after electric lighting and special street illuminations. It was also decided to ask the city council to provide more adequate street sprinkling facilities during the jubilee.

TWO NEW BRIDGES AND NEW PARKS

Structures Will Soon Span Monument Creek---Plans for a Great Park.

The new bridge over the Monument on Huerfano street will not be completed before the 1st of August. The preliminary survey for the bridge at Willamette avenue will be made this week and the work of cutting the street through south of the old Hagerman place will be started shortly. As soon as the approaches are prepared for the bridge at Willamette and the new Huerfano street bridge is constructed the old Huerfano street bridge will be moved north and put in place at Willamette. These bridges will satisfy a want which has long been felt by the people west of the Rio Grande tracks and will give them an entrance at the center of the new park system in the Monument bottom.

Yesterday the first steel of the new Huerfano street bridge was laid on a temporary structure. The concrete is not hard enough yet to support the bridge and it will rest on a temporary structure until it can be lowered to the concrete bases.

The bridge will be 58 feet in width. There will be an eight-foot sidewalk on either side, with a 40-foot driveway between. There will be double car tracks on this driveway and the service on the Manitou line will be greatly added in this way, as cars will not have to wait on the viaduct while other cars are coming across the bridge.

Between Willamette avenue and Boulder street the city owns an extensive tract known as Willow park, and north of Willamette, extending as far as Washburn Field, the Colorado Springs company has recently cleared the ground and made great preparations for another park. When complete, these parks, lying along the banks of the Monument, will form one of the most beautiful spots in this vicinity.

One thing, however, is badly needed to improve the looks of this locality—that is a new bridge for the Mesa road. Nearly every spring when the Monument rises after the heavy rains in the mountains, the crippled wooden structure across the stream at the Mesa road sails down with the flood and a couple of weeks' labor is required before the road is open for traffic again. Almost every tourist who comes to the city, either in going to Manitou or in returning, drives over the Mesa road, and not infrequently surprise is expressed that the city does not put in a more durable and respectable looking structure. For a comparatively small amount a concrete steel bridge could be built there which would satisfy a great want now and be in keeping with the beauty of the parks, which will soon draw great crowds to that vicinity.

DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION

"I had been a sufferer for many years from nervousness with all its symptoms and complications," writes Mrs. O. N. Fisher, 1861 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. "I was constantly going to see a physician or purchasing medicine. In the spring of 1897 my husband induced me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After taking one bottle and following your advice I was so encouraged that I took five more bottles, and then stopped for several weeks as I felt so much better, but still I was not completely cured. I commenced taking it again and felt that I was improving faster than at first. I am not now cross and irritable, and I have a good color in my face; have also gained about ten pounds in weight and one thousand pounds of comfort, for I am a new woman once more and your advice and your 'Favorite Prescription' is the cause of it, coupled with the 'Pleasant Pellets' which are not to be dispensed with. I took eight bottles of the 'Prescription' the last time, making fourteen in all, and will not take any more unless you so advise, for I do not see as I need it."

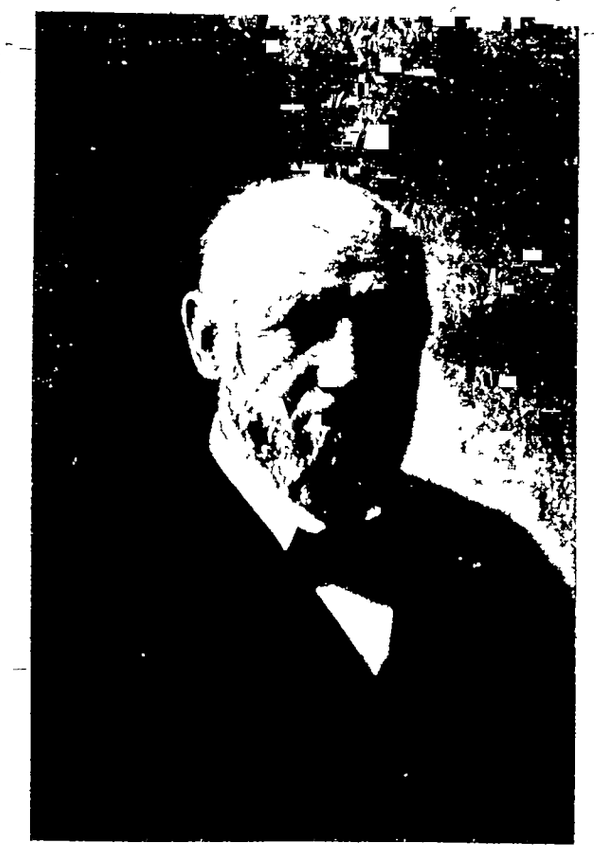
The Legislature and the Corporations

By JUDGE JAMES B. BELFORD

IF ANY RELIANCE is to be placed on the statements contained in the public press there one fears justified in believing that a formidable combination of diverse corporations is in process of incubation having in view the overthrow of the revenue bills enacted by the last general assembly and the rendering nugatory certain acts designed to ameliorate the condition of the laboring class throughout the state. The constitution has been the flesh of these corporations and every act passed by the legislature especially when it trenches on certain preconceived ideas which self interests and greed have evolved must have its orthodoxy adjudged before it can meet with their acceptance. The peculiar incidents attending the eight hour law controversy have not been forgotten by thoughtful and fair minded men. That litigation left an unpleasant memory behind it. Few regret the attorney's approve of the method whereby that litigation was instituted. Still fewer approve the unseemly haste by which it was forced into court and still fewer regard the decision reached as either sound or just. Nor have they forgotten that preceding the holding of the state convention last year certain well paid agents of the corporations with boodle in their pockets were sent throughout the state to enlist the country press and other political agencies in support of the nomination of a certain candidate for supreme judge who public opinion were believed to be in entire consonance with those sought to be enforced by the men laboring to secure his continuance in power.

With these facts—before us we must be pardoned if we doubt the disinterested character of the zeal that certain gentlemen are making ready to display for the constitution. When the validity of a revenue law is assailed the reasons for its overthrow in a style of the most strenuous and extraordinary kind. The revenues are the props on which the stability and efficiency of the state depend. As surely as an army travels on its belly so surely does the state travel on the taxes paid into its coffers and the man who questions the power of legislature to impose needful taxes on all taxable objects must be prepared to show in the most clear and unmistakable manner just where and how the legislature has exceeded its power or abused its rights. Every presumption is in favor of the power and the legislature is as omnipotent within its sphere of action as the British parliament save where its power is restricted by the constitution expressly or by necessary implication. It is not required to look to the constitution to ascertain what powers have been granted. It looks there simply to see what powers have been withheld. The taxing power is political in its nature. Its exercise belongs wholly to the legislative division and its extent is measured only by the necessities of the government. Everyone knows that when the general assembly met last winter the state was in the very throes of bankruptcy. The governor had practically proclaimed the fact. The distressed condition of educational and eleemosynary institutions was cited. The appointment of a special revenue commission confirmed it. What then was the duty of the legislature? Clearly to supply the needed means, restore the financial credit of the state and devise some system that would distribute equally and fairly the burdens to be borne.

No legislative body is infallible or perfect. It is a part of humanity and partake of its infirmities. Notwithstanding the fact that the last legislature has been made the object of partisan rancor and hatred still judging it by what it accomplished and what it tried to accomplish it is rightly entitled to be considered as fair and representative a body as has ever assembled under the dome of the state capital. The offensive boss with his tainted fingers and polluted mouth was conspicuously absent. That certain acts passed by it were afterwards vetoed is not to its discredit. What I mean to say is that the ends it aimed at were in the right direction and what it did do it did it honestly and to its own honor and to the prosperity of the whole state. But my object in writing this article is not to make it to uphold the legislature as it is to call public attention to some matters relating to labor and the laboring class growing out of recent legislation. And first it is well to remember that in the United States there are twenty millions of people who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. People who toil in the mines, in the field, in the forges and factories and to this number may be added millions more engaged in transportation and kindred pursuits. This vast body of toilers represents intelligence and in fact the conservative element of this mighty nation. Of course at times there are riots and difficulties and strikes. But compare if you please the number engaged in the strife with the millions of toilers who peacefully and orderly carry from day to day their contributions to the world's progress and see how few as compared with the great mass are engaged in publicly expressing their discontent with prevailing conditions. The mental constitution and racial instincts of our people lead them to seek progress through orderly methods. Of course violent revolutions now and then will take place but all that is good in the old customs and institutions is religiously preserved. Much of the material used in the old edifice is transplanted into the new and thus renovated from time to time the world moves comfortably along towards its appointed end. It is with the toiling and conservative millions that the word its peace and prosperity has to do. Of all the virtues justice is easily the supremest one and it is to some justice that governments are ordained. When they fail in this respect they fail altogether.—Progress made by the laboring class during the last three centuries has been simply marvelous. Take any path you please and count the milestones of progress along it. In the reign of the great Elizabeth many laborers still belonged to the soil on which they dwelt or worked they were simply serfs, and when the estate was sold they passed with it to the new purchaser. At the close of the eighteenth century those who worked in the mines were compelled to remain in the pits as long as the owners chose to keep them at work there and they were sold as part of the capital invested in the works. If they accepted an engagement elsewhere they were brought back and flogged as thieves for having attempted to rob the owner of the labor. Such was English law until 1799 and so late as 1806 everyone wishing to labor in France was compelled to obtain a license. How wonderful the change that has taken place during the last hundred years. The laborer today is practically free and able to assert and maintain his rights against all challengers. Capital and labor are coming to realize that they are independent forces and that the prosperity of one rests on the prosperity of the other.



HON. JAMES B. BELFORD

Notwithstanding this fact however it is clear that the relations of capital and labor have not yet reached an equilibrium that will insure a continuous peace. Hours of labor have not yet been agreed on the efficiency of cooperation has not yet been fully determined and arbitration as a solvent has not yet been fully accepted. These questions are an inheritance and must be settled before the bright skies of the world can find basis on which future calculations can be safely made. Both capital and labor must extricate themselves from the realm of intellectual anarchy in which they have been moving for so long a time. A fundamental idea must be reached and accepted by both sides before we can hope for the disappearance of those disturbing influences that now occasion general solicitude. These fundamentals may be evolved out of the sheer progress of civilization they may flash forth as sparks from the fires of conflict now raging they may grow out of a rebirth of those primitive [illegible] that centuries ago changed in the most radical fashion the then existing methods and institutions of a pagan and oppressed world. That they will be evolved and accepted no one believing in the divinities of the Christ can doubt.

Compare the conditions of affairs today with those existing 50 years ago. Then the civilized world was in a state of absolute unrest. Riots existed and strikes prevailed in the industrial centers of France, Belgium, England and throughout a great portion of the United States but they were not unattended with good results for the employers manifested a willingness to discuss economic questions with their employes and to at least inquire into the grievances of which they complained. Public sentiment became a potent factor in the settlement of these controversies. Capital began to recognize that labor like itself was organized and was entitled to a hearing and would have one. The leading magazines of the country opened their columns to the discussion of labor questions and employers of labor like Andrew Carnegie devoted their time and ability to discussing methods whereby bitterness and rancor might be allayed misunderstandings corrected and amicable relations re-established. It was then conceded that labor had the right to organize the same as capital. Trades unionism was accepted by many employers and labor urged as far as it could be made legally effective and the wisdom of shortening the hours of labor fairly examined into and many grievances adjusted.

From one of the articles written by Mr Carnegie and published in the Forum April 1886 I take the following extract which I especially commend to the attention of those who are so bitterly opposed to the labor legislation passed by the last general assembly. It is astonishing he says how small a sacrifice upon the part of the employer will sometimes greatly benefit the men. I remember [illegible] meetings with the committee it was incidentally remarked by one speaker that the necessity of obtaining credit at the stores in the neighborhood was a great tax on the men. An ordinary workman he said could not afford to maintain himself and his family for a month and as he only received his pay monthly he was compelled to obtain credit and pay exorbitantly for everything whereas if he had the cash he could buy at 20 per cent less. Why I said why cannot we overcome that by paying every two weeks? The reply was that we did not like to ask it because we have always understood that it would cause much trouble but if you do that it will be worth an advance of five per cent on our wages. We have paid semi monthly since that time.

The above is one instance out of many others that might be cited of how a big brained and Christian hearted man can assuage many of the troubles that now exist between the employer and the employed. In the plan adopted by Mr Carnegie in 1886 and pursued by him ever since I believe and wider plan to follow than the one suggested of rushing into court and asking some judge to declare the law which sanctions Mr Carnegie's plan unconstitutional? Will not the general interests of the state be better advanced by the one method than by the other? Cannot the employer advance his own interests and those of the public by evincing some slight spirit of accommodation? What principle of justice is violated by semi monthly payments? Is not the question one of convenience more than one of the constitution? On which side of this controversy will public sentiment array itself and cannot Colorado follow a precedent set by Pennsylvania? These are matters gentlemen to be considered and dispassionately considered before you venture forth on an angry ocean of legal warfare. Again it might be well to remember that a foreign corporation can do business in this state only on such terms as the legislature shall see fit to prescribe. Is there not some danger in playing with edged tools? Suppose some additional burden has been imposed by the new revenue law is it not the very part of wisdom to temporarily carry this burden in anticipation of a general war against a revenue system that was produced by the most over ruling necessities? Will popular hostility to corporate exactions be placated by organizing an assault on the very means on which the state depends for its existence?

How long do you think a few men representing a fractional portion of the wealth of the state and another few representing a fractional portion of the population of the state will be permitted to endanger its vast interests and menace the peace of the community by haggling over mere percentages or quarreling over the question as to whether payments shall be made on the fifteenth or thirtieth day of the month? It is rapidly coming to be understood that the public has a vital interest in all questions which in any way affect the peace and security. All interests are so intimately interlaced that disturbance in any one of them produces demoralization in all of the others. The smelter strike two years ago made every business nerve in the state tingle because it affected the mines the railroads the merchants, the farmers the day laborer and in fact everybody. The discordance existing between a few smelters and their workmen came near paralyzing the entire state. When such results spring up out of individual differences has not the general public some interest in the settlement of these matters and will it not insist that these controversies shall be settled on principles of justice? As remarked above the natural instincts of the Anglo Saxon favor orderly progress. He is depressed to dictation of oppression and insolence. Public sentiment is a powerful arbiter in all disputed questions and it is rarely on the wrong side of any question that affects the economic welfare of the people.

In the article from which I quoted above Mr Carnegie says I consider that of all the agencies immediately available to prevent wasteful and embittering contests between capital and labor arbitration is the most powerful and beneficial. He adds further I have noticed that the manager who confers oftenest with a committee of his leading men has the least trouble with his workmen. It is the chairman situated hundreds of miles away from his men who only pays a flying visit to the works and perhaps finds time to walk through the mill or mine once or twice a year that is chiefly responsible for the disputes that break out at intervals.

These are golden words and as true as they are golden. The day when misunderstandings can be settled by violence has passed away. He who uses force must stand ready to justify it by the holiest of reasons or he will suffer the most sweeping condemnation. And he who seeks by the exercise of undue influence or through the agency of trickery or technicality, to deprive people of their substantial rights cannot expect a better fate. You all recall the Chicago riots which were brought about by Pullman who refused to arbitrate the case of his distressed workmen. The officers of the regular army who were brought to Chicago by order of President Cleveland met at one of the hotels and denounced the policy of using the army to perpetuate wrongs and by doing so to degrade itself in the eyes of the people. They went further and denounced among themselves the advisers of the president who had sent them on such a mission. These things were carefully withheld from the public but such are the facts. This incident is pregnant with most extraordinary meaning. What then is the wise course to pursue in the present emergency? Is it for the corporations to follow the advice of their attorneys and appeal to supply the wherewith sources have made them rich and powerful? Is it for the corporations to say to the workmen It is not your needs but our pleasure that must determine the time when your wages must be paid? This matter gentlemen is up to you. Precipitate an extra session of the legislature if you desire but be ready abundantly ready to accept the results, for they will not be what you anticipate. The reign of the boss in Colorado as legislative halls is over at least for the present.

CORPORAL WILLIAM CURL AND HIS ILOCANO SCOUTS

Mr William E Curl whose portrait appears in the center of the group above has been detailed from the army and is now serving with the Ilocano scouts in northern Luzon. Mr Curl, who was a student in Colorado college enlisted in the army at the outbreak of the war and his efficient soldiery performance of duty soon won for him a corporal's chevrons. When the command with which he was serving company K of the Thirty fourth volunteer infantry, was ordered home from the Philippines Corporal Curl asked for his discharge that he might remain as a civilian in the islands. Immediately upon the receipt of his discharge he was engaged for service with the Ilocano scouts a band of natives under American officers which has recently rendered valuable service in northern Luzon. Mr Curl in a very entertaining and faithful letter to his mother describes his duties as a scout his experience in dealing with his Filipino subordinates and the nature of the service they are performing for our government. He writes that he intends to start for Australia in July via Suez Palestine and England.

THE FATHER DYER

Colorado's Loss in the Death of a Venerable Man of God---Humanity's Gain in His Life.

"Death to him is but a rather shining shade."

After resting his locks beloved of age

Rev John L Dyer pioneer preacher and missionary of the Rocky mountain region known throughout the west as the snowshoe itinerant died last Sunday in Denver at the home of his daughter Mrs Noble Streator in University park. The funeral was held last Wednesday, and according to the wishes of Father Dyer as he was lovingly called the ceremonies were of a simplest nature. No sermon was preached. The pioneers of Colorado among whom Father Dyer had spent nearly all his days, were his eulogists for there is probably no man in the state who is more highly esteemed and sincerely loved than the gentle mannered lofty minded Father Dyer. The body lay in state at Trinity Methodist church where thousands of people paid their last loving reverence in tribute of the faith and loyalty of a departed friend and adviser. Father Dyer's favorite hymn was sung and a few old friends many of whom had known him for over half a century said a few words in memoriam. The body was taken to Castle Rock and buried beside his wife and son.

In the death of Father Dyer Colorado and the world loses a friend—for he was a friend to the desolate the weary and the uncomforted carrying words of cheer and blessing to all. Long before the first church spire pointed heavenwards in this state Father Dyer preached the gospel of love in this territory and blazed the way for christianity throughout the Rocky mountain region. Not a trace of the physical suffering the hardships of hunger heat and cold—not a shadow of the heart ache of isolation and loneliness that must often have been the sad portion of the pioneer was reflected in the strong trusting face that had looked upon almost 90 years of life and love and peace were reflected back to the world and death was but the passing into the eternal light and truth which he had so constantly preached. His life had been one of well doing to all mankind indifferent of creed color or circumstance. He was a godly man and a manly man. He traveled from camp to camp over the heights of wearying mountains and through the lengths of valleys, and everywhere his approach was hailed with gladness. To the tired and disappointed man whose fondly cherished hope of wealth had long since changed to stoical bitterness he brought that comfort which the world never could give.

He was a man of many scholarly attainments achieved solely through his own efforts. He began the service of spreading the gospel in 1843 in Wisconsin. From there he came to Denver on horseback in 1861 without a penny in his pocket but with more than a fortune in energy and will. Father Dyer was of the militant type of preacher.

He was born March 30 1811 and spent his early youth on the farm and in the lumber camps of northern Wisconsin and Michigan. Since 1844 he has been a member of the Colorado Methodist conference and only two years ago, while at the age of 87 he again made the tour of all the mining camps many of which were now thriving towns that he had once visited when the population was represented by a few hardy frontiersmen and their indian neighbors. He was received everywhere like a beloved father or a patriarch. Parents and grandparents, whose children he had baptized married and buried again came to greet their old pastor and to look once more into the gentle face whose expression was always love and kindness.

When names were submitted for the windows of the capitol dome requests came from every part of the state urging that Father Dyer's portrait be permitted here with the galaxy of honor. The request was unanimously granted and Father Dyer's portrait will be among the rest of the pioneers who have builded up the great state of Colorado.

"His sobriquet 'Snow Shoe Itinerant' was earned on account of his travels over the Snowy range. In those days preaching was not so lucrative and Father Dyer carried the mails to Leadville over the Mosquito pass one of the most perilous routes in the state, preaching three times a week en route. On these journeys he endured untold hardships. At one time he was lost in a blizzard and froze both feet. But physical suffering was the least which he had to endure. His greatest grief was the cowardly shooting of his son J E Dyer at Leadville in 1875. Young Dyer was the probate judge of Lake county and on account of a decision which he rendered in a shooting affray between Harrington and Gibbs, he was shot from the back and instantly killed. Both men were tried but no one was ever convicted for the dastardly act. One of the last acts of Father Dyer's life was to pray for forgiveness for the two men. Years before he pronounced a vehement curse against them. Just before he died as the last sacrament was being administered he feebly whispered I forgive them—the men who killed my boy. Thus he died as he lived with the precepts of the forgiving Saviour in his heart.

Of such a life it may truly be said
O Death where is thy sting?
O Grave where is thy victory?

THE FIRST OF JUNE

And over the world a silver haze
Now have come the silling days
When field and wood are bedewy,
Blends the emerald with the blue

Now doth summer clothe the land
In garments free from soot or stain—
The luxurious leaves the hills untanned
The vivid meads the glaucous grain

The day looks new a coin unworn
Freshly stamped in heavenly mint
The sky has seen its look of morn
Of age and death there is no hint

How soft the landscape near and far
A shining veil the trees infold
The day remembers noon and star
A silver lining hath its gold

Again I see the clover bloom
And wade in grasses lush and sweet
Again has vanished all my gloom

Again from out the garden hives
The exodus of frenzied bees
The humming cyclone onward drives
Or finds repose amid the trees

At dawn the river seems a lake
A liquid shadow deep as space
But when the sun the mist has laid
A diamond shower smiles its face

The season's tide now reaches its height
And gives to earth an aspect new,
Every shoal is hid from sight
With current fresh as morning dew

Our Way to Ride

When Ted Sloan first appeared on the English tracks people saw a mite of humanity, perched in scorching position with the knees clamped to the horse's withers. His stirrups were so short that his chin almost brushed his knees and he had neither whip nor spurs. The English school and the old American school of jockeys sat straight in the saddle with long stirrups and punished the horse severely. The effect of Sloan's method was ludicrous and all England laughed. Now the jockeys over there try to imitate him.

There is sound logic in Sloan's monkey like riding. He takes all weight away from the horse's kidneys so that the hind or driving part of the animal is left free to impart rapid motion. Also by all slight to the shoulders [illegible] of bouncing up and down thus racking the horse at every leap he adjusts himself as part of the animal. By crouching over the animal's neck he diminishes the atmospheric resistance by more than a third. The Reiff brothers Danny Maher Martin and all the young American jockeys here and abroad now ride in this fashion. Its value has been demonstrated in England where the first three named together with Sloan have carried off all racing honors for two seasons.

The Reiff boys are sons of an Ohio blacksmith. They have made $250,000 in a few years. They are notable among jockeys, not for having earned so much money but for having saved it because the jockey is seldom frugal. His average pay in one season counting $25 for winning mounts and $10 for losing ones reaches a total amount of about $5,000. Against this sum must be charged fines and valet expenses. This is a minimum salary. Nowadays all good jockeys receive large retaining fees from their owners and in addition win a good deal through betting.

When a jockey retires from the saddle he does without having saved any money. His future is dismal. As a reaction from abnormal training he usually becomes very fat and sluggish and with no education seems unable to make a good living. Cal Rigl made famous in painting when he won the memorable Metropolitan Derby in 1889 now takes in washing with his wife at Coney Island. The man who was Urai's attendant in those faraway days of triumph now receives $500 a week as a burlesque comedian. He is Charley Ross.

Mike Bergen tended bar for a long time and Pete Dunn one of the best jockeys this country has produced has a milk route in upper New York. A few like Jimmy McLaughlin are doing well as trainers and owners but the majority of these old time celebrities have slipped out of sight like the horses they rode.—(Allen Sangree, in Atalanta.

Changes in Rapid Transit Management and in Mr. Stratton's Office.

Mr W A Harris who has for the last four and a half years been private secretary and confidential man for Mr W S Stratton and who has been at the head of the management of the street railway system in this city of Colorado Springs since they got it under the control of Mr Stratton has severed his connection with the street railway and retires altogether from the position in Mr Stratton's employ He is succeeded by Mr W C Fitch formerly of Pueblo and now manager of Mr Stratton's affairs in the Cripple Creek district

Mr Fitch of Pueblo is a brother of Rev Robert Fitch of the Colorado Springs Presbyterian church and is a young man of about 30 years of age He is a graduate of Yale college and has been for some time past in the employ of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company at Pueblo

Mr Harris will be retained by the Colorado Springs and Cripple Creek District railway company in the capacity of secretary and treasurer of the company and will have charge of the office in the Exchange building in this city

Mr Fitch is a young man of about 30 years of age He is a graduate of Yale and in the position of confidential man to Mr Stratton Mr Harris has held the position for nearly five years and during that time has made many friends who will regret his departure from the city

He intimated that he might decide to take a cabin in some mountain canyon for the summer and perhaps for about three months He has not yet decided where he will go but it is probable that he will go to some place in Colorado Springs or Cripple Creek where he may be found by his friends who may call on him

The affairs of the Colorado Springs and Cripple Creek District railway company will be in charge of Mr Stratton and the management of the road will be in charge of Mr Stratton in person

THE CASINO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ITS PERSONNEL . . . . . .

Colorado Springs people have had an opportunity the past week of the new Casino symphony orchestra and with one accord they coincide with the Gazette's opinion in last Saturday's paper that the music is the finest ever heard at the Tabor and well that Manager Kappler and Signor Cavallo the orchestra leader are overwhelmed with congratulations to that effect and why shouldn't it be the best? It is costing a good deal more money than any organization that has ever played there It can also be stated without fear of successful contradiction that each man from Signor Cavallo down is an artist of merit

Something regarding the members of the orchestra may be interesting at this time as showing at least that they rank high in their profession.

SIGNOR RAFFAELO CAVALLO,

The director of the orchestra is a native of Italy He came to America when quite young At an early age he began as a pupil under Signor Gloria of Albany New York and so progressed That he was leading an orchestra at the age of thirteen at the Green street theater in Albany After that he became the leader of the Grand opera house in 1892 he was leader of the Theater Royal in Montreal In 1894 he was made director of the Queens theater in Montreal and held until 1903 when he was transferred by the management to the Newark theater in New York city A few years ago his health failed and he came to Colorado when he succeeded Herr Richard Stark at the Tabor opera house and also at Elitch's gardens The past season Signor Cavallo had charge of both orchestras of the Tabor and Broadway theaters in Denver which position he still holds

HERR RICHTER

Herr Oswald Richter, the first violin and assistant director, has been in Colorado many years and is known to all musicians He was graduated at the conservatory in Dresden as a young man and had the most brilliant prospects in Germany In 1884 he accepted an offer from Dr Damrosch the elder to come to this country and take a place with his great orchestra. He remained with Dr Damrosch for several years and came to Denver with the organization He liked Denver and settled there He was one of the first leaders at the Tabor and held that post for nine consecutive seasons He was also director at the City park for three seasons For the past five seasons he has been assistant director to Signor Cavallo

JULIUS MEYER

Julius Meyer, the second violin is a prominent artist of Denver For several seasons he officiated at Manhattan Beach three seasons at City park a member of Signor Cavallo's orchestra at Elitch's gardens in 97 and 98, in 99 with City Park orchestra in Denver and last season with the Denver Symphony orchestra under Mr Henry Housler,

WM KARBACH

Wm Karbach who plays the viola performed in Boyd's theater in Omaha for three years In Manhattan Beach (Brooklyn) for two seasons He was at Elitch's gardens with Signor Cavallo for four seasons and at the Broadway theater Denver and Broadmoor Casino last season

LOUIS APPY

Louis Appy the cellist is an artist of merit and experience He has had a great career in Europe He needs no introduction to the patrons of Broadmoor Casino where his ability attracted much attention last year He has been a member of the symphony orchestras in Amsterdam in Berlin in Warsaw in Poland and other continental cities where the greatest work is required He has been a member of the symphony orchestra in Kansas City and for the past five years has been a valued member of Signor Cavallo's orchestra

J W WALKER

J W Walker the bassoon is a celebrated performer on his instrument having had some of the best engagements in this country From 88 to 90 he was with Frank Damrosch of Minneapolis In 91 and 92 he was connected with the Alhambra theater Chicago and for five seasons later he performed in the Columbia theater, Chicago In the summer of 97 he was with Victor Herbert the popular bandmaster and composer For the past three years he has been with the Lee Nelson Opera company under Paul Etherdorf, one of the best opera directors in this country Last summer he was with Conterno's celebrated band

HERMAN BEHNKE

Herman Behnke the flutist is an artist whose work speaks for itself He has been a member of some of the most prominent orchestras both in Germany and America From 85 to 88 he was with the Germania theater, New York city 89 to 92 in Palmer's theater, New York city 92 to 95 in the Garden theater New York city, under Jesse Williams a noted conductor for the past five seasons he has been a member of the orchestra in the world's famous restaurant, Delmonico's

JOSEPH BAUM

Joseph Victor Baum solo clarinetist comes from Germany where he received his musical education From 84 to 87 he was bandsman with the 10th regiment at Breslau, Germany, and for some time after played in German theaters In 92 he joined the John Beck Symphony orchestra in Kansas City He has been clarinetist with the Colorado state band and was with Stark two years and last season was with Cavallo

FRANK HENSGEN

Frank Hensgen the cornetist has been with Mr Cavallo for three seasons past and his work is of such a class that the leader always keeps him in his organization

L P Losson tympani and drums comes from New York where he has had an extensive experience In 1890 he was with Signor Cavallo in Montreal In 91 in Buffalo at the Lyceum theater in Toronto at the Princess theater 92 at the Grand Opera house in Boston 93 and 94 at the Grand opera house in Brooklyn 97 in New York at the 125th street theater and for three seasons at Waldmann's theater Newark N J

REPORT ON SEVEN LAKES

Magnitude of the Undertaking Will Delay the Statement to the Council for Another Week.

The survey which is being made in the Seven Lakes region by the city engineer to determine the advisability of purchasing water rights there will be completed today The notes will be brought down at once and the staff of the city engineers office will begin the preparation of an exhaustive report to be submitted to the council one week from tomorrow night.

It is impossible now to prophesy what recommendations will be made but it is known that there are a number of things connected with the project which make it inadvisable It is probable that litigation will arise as to the ownership of water rights and the authenticity of the options on the property There are in all 609 acres included in the plans submitted to the council Four hundred acres are covered by clear titles and by options and the remaining 200 by placer locations in order to get the water over the divide which separates the Seven lakes from the Colorado Springs watershed it will be necessary to drive a tunnel about 2 000 feet in length and this tunnel with the dam which must be constructed will cost in the neighborhood of $200 000

A glance at the records of a prelim[illegible] assessments was rather disappointing because of the smallness of the stream found to be flowing from the lakes But the value of this particular water proposition lies not only in the Seven lakes and the water they contain but in the great watershed of which they are merely the bottom If a dam be constructed across the Beaver stream below the last lake a flow of water can be secured far greater than the stream which now flows from the lakes

Mr Case in his report will take up carefully all the phases of the situation and will probably make some definite recommendations to the council

Restaurant Owners Will Not Give In

Representatives of the union restaurants of the city met last evening and decided to make no concessions to the Cooks and Waiters union A meeting was held in the afternoon but as no definite conditions could be reached they adjourned until the evening when they came to a unanimous agreement The restaurant men report that they anticipate no difficulty in securing all the help they want but it is also reported on good authority that one prominent restaurant man of this city, acting for himself and others went to Denver Friday and engaged 20 cooks and waiters to come to Colorado Springs Saturday all of whom yesterday refused to come the union in Denver having offered them better inducements to let Colorado Springs and its restaurant people fight out their fight among themselves

They deny that they have made any effort to secure cooks or waiters in Denver or Pueblo

Mr Adamson the walking delegate of the local union said that there would be no Britons on the part of the union members in striking Monday morning He think the restaurants must accede to the demands of the union for increased wages and says that in case no favorable message has come from the employers before 10 o'clock tomorrow morning all 70 members of the union now employed here will walk out.

Mr W S Nye and Mr Gene representatives of the restaurant owners said after the meeting last evening that they did not want any fight on their hands but that they could not accede to the demands of their employes and make any money In the sessions held yesterday they carefully went over the expense accounts and as a result declare that if the increase asked for were given the restaurant owners would not make as much money as the cooks Accordingly they are agreed to pay no attention to the notice served on them by the Cooks and Waiters union If their employes walk out tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and they have no several enough servants to continue their business the treasury contains enough money to pay all rents until such time as they can again open their doors.

Pike View Saw Mill Is Ready to Operate

The vicinity of the Pike View coal mine north of Colorado Springs is rapidly becoming a very busy community The post office that has been located for several years at Edgerton has been removed to the cabin of A. R. Fowler and installed as postmaster

The greatest question that the community has had however since the mines became the place of which this thriving town is being built, is the saw mill that is to begin operations this week It has already been put in shape for work and the logs will begin to be converted into lumber within a day or two

The capacity of the mill is large but it is intended only to supply the demand in the immediate vicinity The proprietor of the establishment has for several years conducted a saw mill on the stage road between this city and Cripple Creek his mill being close to the right of way of the Short Line Recently he was visiting the community about the coal mines and he noted the fact that there were large tracts of well timbered land along the foot of the mountains to the west. It would be a down hill pull all the way to take the logs to the vicinity of the coal mines and there would be a ready market for the product if he should haul it. It will there owing to the rapid increase in the growth of the city and the large and increasing demand for new houses Accordingly he secured an option on the timber and arranged with the Pike's Peak Fuel company to furnish him with power if he should erect his mill

The option on the timber has been taken [illegible] houses erected in this new town will be built of timber made at home It is believed by the proprietor of the mill that at the rate this timber can be manufactured and the demand for the same [illegible] active business for about two years

Consumptives Can't Live In the East . . .

Let the dread disease get a good start and nature soon gives up the fight. Then in a little while comes death and all is over.

But it's different with the consumptive who is cured. Let a thorough cure be made and the cured patient lives safely anywhere. Hundreds of consumptives come to Colorado every summer. Some stay here forever after, many return east to die. A few

Many of them have voluntarily written Dr. Shepard letters telling of their cure and invited him to refer other consumptives to them. In the fullness of their gratitude over being cured so they may live in the east they wish to spread the good news to other sufferers. You may see their letters by calling at Dr. Shepard's office. LAKES' REPORT ON THE RIO BLANCO OIL FIELDS

Last week announcement was made of the fact that Prof. Arthur Lakes, one of the most prominent experts of Colorado, had been to Rio Blanco county, Colo., to examine the oil fields of this district. A preliminary statement was secured from Professor Lakes for readers of the Gazette and now the major portion of his complete report, with illustrations from the same source, are presented. The report shows that in Rio Blanco we have a most promising oil field. The district is large, the geological conditions perfect, while the spring discovered there, Professor Lakes says, is the strongest and most copiously flowing in the state of Colorado.

The portions of the report reproduced read as follows:

Rio Blanco county is situated in the extreme northwestern corner of Colorado, between the border lines of Utah and Wyoming. The principal rivers are the Grand river on the south and the White river on the north, with various tributaries to each. * * *

The locality in which the oil springs, about to be described, are located, is in the heart or towards the western slope of the Book Cliff range of mountains, between Whiskey creek and Evacuation creek, tributaries of White river. * * *

More than one railroad line has been surveyed across this barrier range, always at the gilsonite beds of Rio Blanco county and at the coal beds and mineral and oil deposits of Routt county with an ultimate terminus at Salt Lake. There are no serious obstacles in the way of such lines, nor are the passes in the mountains by any means insurmountable. * * *

GEOLOGY.

The general geologic features of the region are simple and can be read at a glance by studying the accompanying general section of the country. The leading feature is a gentle broad anticlinal arch or upheaval of the granite basis immediately south of the Grand river. * * *

THE OIL SPRINGS.

Leaving Oil Camp and following up Whiskey creek for about a mile along the edge of Oil plateau, we encounter Oil creek. The presence of the oil being distinctly perceptible by the atmosphere being changed by its smell and by the oil saturating the ground along the course of the little creek which ascends for a few hundred yards up a narrow ravine to the point where the spring issues. On the left, or north side of this ravine we pass under the walls of the oil mesa from 50 to 100 feet high, composed of variegated banded red and green shales, capped by a ledge of brown sandstone, forming the top of the plateau. In a few yards this wall of variegated strata abruptly ends by a narrow chasm leading into a sort of cave on the opposite wall of this chasm. A brown sandstone (the oil sandstone) with curious round concretions of lime and clay come abruptly against the variegated strata, showing there is a line of faulting here. The hill on the south wall of the chasm and cave appear to be formed of this sandstone near its base with beds of variegated clays above. The summit of the hill about 100 feet above the ravine is capped by a dark reddish brown sandstone smelling strongly of oil and containing a bed about a foot thick entirely composed of fossil shells. This hill shows evidence of disturbance and faulting and it is in a series of shearage or faulting cracks. In the base of this hill the oil spring occurs, issuing or coming upwards through the fault fissures or cracks in the brown and oil-soaked sandstone. The main fissure has been enlarged by hand so that a man can just squeeze himself into the aperture, and see at his feet a little pool caused by the ascending oil and water as in an ordinary spring. There appears to be a preponderance of oil over water, and both together after filling the little pool, which is a few inches deep, trickle over and run down the grooved face of the rock or are conveyed by a pipe into a wooden reservoir below, some 20 feet, a box 6x6x6 feet, in other words, six feet square and deep. Looking into this as the light pours in, the oil is seen floating on the surface, of a dark olive green color, similar in color to that of Florence, Colo. There were about six feet of oil and water in this at the time, the greater part being oil, and the reservoir was estimated to contain at the time about 100 gallons of oil. Seepage from the spring has for an untold time flowed till checked by this reservoir down the ravine and the power of the spring is evidenced by the way in which it has soaked the ground for a hundred yards or more down the ravine below the spring itself. To what depth I do not know, but a little excavation of a foot showed the earth still saturated.

With a piece of thick white blotting paper, I made a common rough test of the oil by pouring a drop of it on the paper, which it immediately saturated to the other side. This would suggest a light oil rather than a heavy or asphaltine oil, which would not thus readily soak the paper. I do not pretend to estimate how many gallons of oil may seep from the spring daily, but I should suppose several gallons could easily be collected.

From the fact that the oil ascends through a fault fissure or series of cracks rather than issuing along a line of stratification, I am inclined to think that the appearance of the spring on the surface does not indicate that it is the source of the oil; but that the oil ascends from still lower strata, lower than we have an opportunity of observing in the canon. I do not, however, think that the fault is a profound one, but local and comparatively shallow in depth.

From the spring we ascend to the top of the plateau above it. This is a bench extending out from below the main cliff, composed of the variegated series, underlaid, we believe, by massive yellow or brown soft sandstone which probably carries the oil. The plateau is covered by trees and rubbish and in less than a mile is cut by another sharp ravine. We ascended this ravine, hoping to find oil signs, but though we found the same strata with variegated beds above and massive yellow sandstone below, we saw no signs of seepage and could only gain a petroleum odor from certain points of the underlying yellow sandstone. However, across the valley of Whiskey creek in nearly the same line as this canon and about a mile and a half from the spring, and half a mile below camp, we found very distinct oil float lying in the boulders of sandstone in the bottom of the canon, but could not trace them to their source, though I have no doubt but a little prospecting would locate them in the same oil-zone sandstone at the base of the variegated strata at the spring.

These were all the positive oil signs we found in the immediate vicinity of Whiskey creek, but Mr. McKnight told me there was another oil spring he had visited about ten miles northeast of our oil spring, which appeared very similar in many respects to the Whiskey creek one, and which he believed would flow as strong if the same hand labor were done on it. He described it as about the same horizon as the Whiskey creek spring beneath the variegated zone, but he thought at a little lower zone than the Whiskey creek spring. The inference from this is that there is a zone extending over a large area of this country from which oil may reasonably be expected to be found on boring for it at a reasonable depth.

Although at Whiskey creek we have only one good positive evidence of oil, viz.: at the spring, it does not follow that that is the only place where it is to be found. By following the very gentle slope of the strata and country, which appeared to us to northwest, oil may reasonably be looked for at any suitable point, one, two or three miles away, where the oil zone or stratum outcrops or where it comes to the level of the creek or passes beneath it, and whilst I would advise the first wells to be located as near as possible to the spring on the oil plateau above them, I see no reason why trial wells may not also be put down further down the valley, as for example near the junction of Whiskey and Evacuation creeks.

As a guide line I would say, follow the variegated ... wherever you see it, and bore down through it or beneath it. This zone is seen in various localities as for example far eastward on both sides of Evacuation creek, nearly up to the edge of the pass.

I would say that the geological and physical conditions are favorable from a geological point of view, and since the presence of oil is actually and copiously shown in the vicinity I believe this is undoubted oil territory.

The territory strata represents the bed of an old lake, the lower portion of which, judging from the character of the shells was brackish, the shales show by their blackness the presence of bituminous matter either from animal or vegetable life, and it is from such organic conditions that oil is supposed to have arisen. Again the rapid succession or alternation of shales and porous sandstones is particularly favorable to the storage of oil. A well put down for 1,000 to 2,000 feet on Oil Plateau, or in the oil-zone, besides encountering at, I think, a comparative slight depth the Whiskey creek oil horizon would pass through a series of shales and sandstones in the underlying strata that might equally well yield an oil sand or be oil-bearing till the shales of the Marine Cretaceous are reached at 2,500 to 3,000 feet, and the same horizon as at Florence.

As regards the transportation of the oil I have already observed that a railroad has been surveyed close to the well aiming at the gilsonite beds at Rainsville, near White river and points beyond. We traced these stakes all along our route. Should this railroad be built, transportation is, of course, settled. Should it not, however, with modern appliances, the oil might, if proved abundant, be piped and forced by steam 58 miles over to the main trunk line at Crevasse. Temporarily, until the oil field proved of great dimensions, the present wagon road put in order might suffice.

As to the character of the oil itself, the following analysis made, one of them for other parties than our own, but kindly submitted to me with permission to publish, and the other made directly for this company, will speak for themselves. I have also obtained the criticism of Dr. Julius Ohly, an able oil chemist of Denver, on one of these analyses.

Respectfully yours,
Arthur Lakes.

REPORT ON A SAMPLE OF CRUDE OIL FROM RIO BLANCO COUNTY, COLORADO.

The crude oil submitted to us for examination was subjected to distillation in the proper apparatus, arranged so as to allow of the determination of the several boiling points of the constituents of the oil.

In this manner we found that the volatile parts of the oil are very limited, a trace of petroleum ether going over at a temperature lying between 40 degrees and 70 degrees; also a trace of gasoline, between 70 degrees and 90 degrees C, a trace of naptha between 90 degrees and 110 degrees C, and a trace of ligroin and benzine at temperature lying between 80 degrees and 120 degrees C and 150 degrees C.

The greatest part of the constituent oils could be obtained at a temperature ranging from 238 degrees C to 240 degrees C; when 24 per cent went over and was readily condensed to liquid oil. This boiling point of the oil of 240 degrees C. is equal to about 460 degrees F.

On heating the remaining liquid further, it was found that 20 per cent of it could be readily obtained by continued distillation at 280 degrees C., which degree corresponds to 540 degrees F.; and on raising the heat to between 400 degrees and 500 degrees C., 24 per cent more of the oil was obtained, the product assuming a deeper color in accordance with the rise in the temperature. The constituents of the oil are, therefore, to a great extent by compounds passing over:

At 40 degrees to 150 degrees C., 1 per cent, McCoy analysis.

At 150 degrees to 200 degrees C., 4 per cent.

At 238 degrees C., 24 per cent.

At 280 degrees C., 20.5 per cent.

At 400 degrees to 500 degrees C., 24 per cent.

At 500 degrees C. and over, 12 per cent.

Residue (asphaltum), 15 per cent.

A determination of the specific gravity of the oil showed that this was 0.933 or 20 degrees Baume at 85 degrees F.

The grades of oil resulting on refining the raw product will be mainly distinguished as car, engine, valve and dynamo oils.

The product resulting at 238 degrees C will be found to answer the purposes of illuminating or miners' oil; that is, on mixing the same with lard oil, it will be a desirable product to use in miners' lamps.

The price of the raw material or crude oil will be in the neighborhood of 13 cents per gallon; while by the barrel at the place of production, it will bring 6 cents per gallon when piped or distributed on the Wholesale plan.

It has been found by testing the oil with the addition of sulphuric and hydrochloric acids to weighed amounts of the same and the addition of red lead to induce a purification of the oil, that there is but a slight improvement of the oil under these circumstances; and that the proper way to refine it consists in subjecting the crude product to distillation in a still, about a 50-barrel still, cheese-box type, arranged for rapid work. Ten barrels a day, as an average yield, at $9 a barrel, would be considered a fair production.

It is suggested that the water associated with the oil, be tested and its chemical constituents ascertained, so as to establish the relation of the salts contained therein to those of the eastern or Pennsylvania oil fields.

Yours very truly,
Field & Goody,
Assayers and Chemists.

ANALYSIS OF SAMPLE OF CRUDE OIL.

The oil is viscous and nearly black in color.

Two hundred and fifty centimeters (c. c.) was subjected to fractional distillation from a glass retort. The distillate was caught in nine equal portions of 25 c. c. The residue then remaining in the retort was a black viscous mass which, upon cooling, solidified. The oils so obtained are numbered from 1 to 9. The solid residue is No. 10. The color varied from almost white in No. 1 to a very deep red in No. 9. Decomposition, due to high temperature necessary to boil the oil, took place in distilling off the last two or three fractions. The specific gravities and flashing points of the nine fractions are given in the following table:

No. of Fraction.	Specific Gravity. at 20 deg. C.	C.	Flash Point F.
1	.860	70	158
2	.907	90	194
3	.917	105	221
4	.926	110	230
5	.937	115	239
6	.931	135	275
7	.936	132	270
8	.939	130	266
9	.942	100	212
10	A black solid, resembling Gilsonite.

The first two fractions (20 per cent.) will produce a high grade burning kerosene of high flashing point. The fractions 6, 7, 8 and 9 and probably a large portion of 5 also, are lubricating oils.

In the manufacture of lubricating oils in actual practice it is frequently found that a better grade of oil is produced when the lubricating portion is distilled with superheated steam or distilled in a vacuum.

The crude oil was next subjected to a vacuum distillation with highly satisfactory results. Vacuum distillations can be conducted at a very much lower temperature than distillations made in the ordinary way. The oil examined showed no trace of decomposition while distilling in a vacuum, the lubricating fractions and the lubricating oils so produced were much better in quality than those above described.

The vacuum process was carried out as follows: 250 c. c. of the crude oil was distilled in a glass retort, exactly as in the first distillation, until 110 c. c. had been collected (sample a). (This portion corresponds to the samples 1, 2, 3, 4 and 2-5 of the 5 of the first distillation.) It is not necessary to distill this part off in a vacuum as there is no decomposition. The residue measuring 140 c. c. A portion of this, 43 c. c., was distilled in a vacuum. The entire distillate was lubricating oils. It was collected in two portions. The first (b) measured 30 c. c. The second (c) 8 c. c. The residue (5 c. c.) consisted of black mass like No. 10 of the first distillation. The results of this distillation show that the crude oil will yield the following products:

Burning kerosene and intermediate oils (a) corresponding to 1, 2, 3, 4, and 2-5 of the 5 of the last distillation	44 Pct.
Lighter lubricating oils (b) of second distillation	33 Pct.
Heavier, viscous lubricating oils (c) of second distillation	10 Pct.
Residue, resembling Gilsonite	7 Pct.
	100 Pct.

The flashing point of (b) is 358 degrees F. That of (c) is certainly much higher. It was not determined owing to the small quantity of oil obtained.

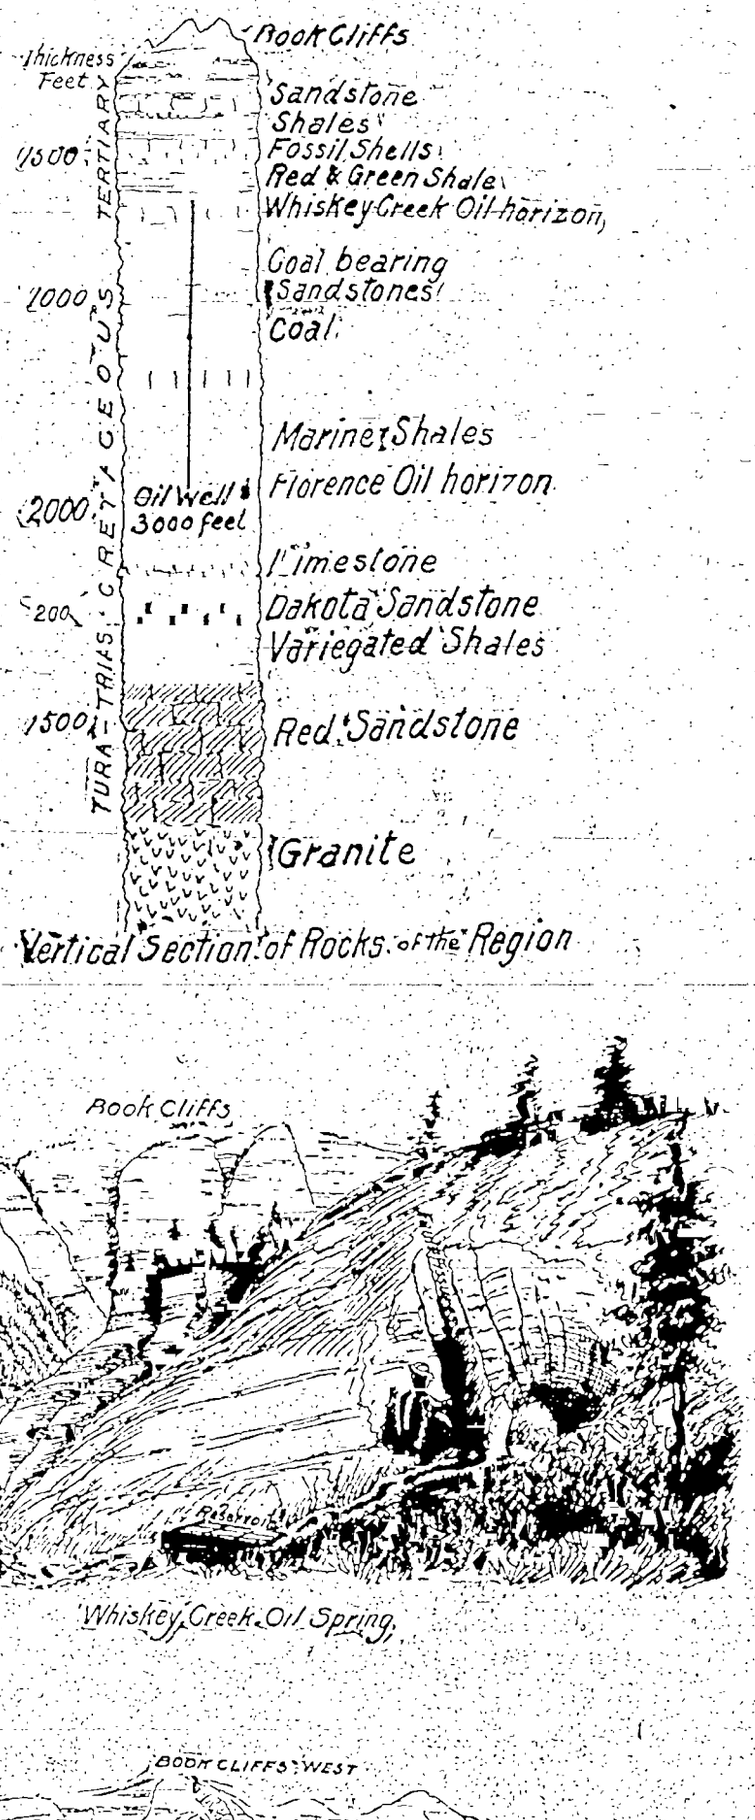
No attempt was made to refine the various products. The quality of all of the oils can be improved by refining process.

Respectfully submitted.
H. N. McCoy.

As to the analysis of the sample of crude oil, made by Mr. McCoy, Ph. D., of the University of Utah, it becomes apparent that the body of the oil consists of 44 per cent. burning or kerosene oil, and 49 per cent. of lubricating oil. These two qualities of oil can be readily separated by fractional distillation, and will bring the following wholesale Denver prices: Burning or illuminating oil, $8.50 per barrel, and lubricating oil, $7.50 per barrel, so that the average value of the oil per barrel is $8.00. The refining of the oil should be carried out preferably in stills of the cheese-box pattern, and the product brought on the market in barrels, holding about 50 gallons each, as usual. The residue, of 7 per cent., resembling gilsonite, should be used as fuel or be manufactured into an isolating or non-conductive rubber.

On examining and comparing the analysis of Mr. McCoy of the Utah university with that made by Messrs. Field and Goody, Denver, Colo., it will be seen that the results agree closely, since the figures given for the oil distilling between 238 degrees C. and 500 degrees C., if added, give the figure 44.5 per cent., given in the report of Mr. McCoy as burning and intermediate oils of 44 per cent. On the adding of the percentages of oils, distilling, according to the report of Field and Goody, between 400 degrees and 500 degrees C. and above, the figure 51 per cent. will be reached, which approaches the sum of the lighter and heavier lubricating oils in percentages given in the report of Mr. McCoy.

Respectfully to Mr. A. Lakes,
By Dr. Julius Ohly,
218 Equitable building.



INCREASE IN CONSUMPTION OF CALIFORNIA FUEL OIL IS CERTAIN TO BE LARGE

Although there has been a vast increase in the production of oil, principally in California, during the past few years there is always a ready demand for it. Now that a steady production is assured the demand increases and with all the Southern Pacific railroad engines equipped for the use of oil instead of coal the prospects are for a total consumption of 15,000,000 barrels per annum while the total production cannot exceed 10,000,000 barrels, as the following figures will demonstrate:

The consumption of oil by a locomotive is figured at twenty barrels per day, and three hundred days in the year:

Southern Pacific railroad	5,850,000
Santa Fe railroad	1,260,000
Salt Lake, Pacific Coast and Northern	126,000
Refineries in the state	2,000,000
Factories, Street Railways, etc., in Southern Calif.	1,000,000
Street railways, ship yards, iron works, ferries, four ocean steamers, fifteen river steamers, gas works, mines and manufactories throughout the balance of the state now using or changing burners to oil	5,000,000
	15,270,000

Production for one year—
Coalinga	500,000
Sunset district	1,000,000
Kern River district	4,500,000
McKittrick district	500,000
Midway district	100,000
Santa Barbara county	100,000
Orange county	450,000
Los Angeles county	2,000,000
Ventura county	750,000
	9,900,000

When President C. M. Hays of the Southern Pacific railroad issued his famous order for the equipping of all the engines of the Pacific division of that road to burn oil he did a great work for California. The Southern Pacific company has never posed as a philanthropist, nor under its new management will it be managed as a charity institution. It is conceded that oil is 50 per cent. cheaper than coal in California. This then is a business proposition and says the Southern Pacific company $4,000,000 in one year. But it is a great thing for California for the reason that it demonstrates to the world the oft repeated assertion that oil is cheaper than coal, and it insures beyond a doubt the adoption of this fuel by all the great industrial enterprises of the state, the coast and trans-Pacific steamers.

It is well known that for several years oil has been used as a fuel on locomotives in California, but it is not generally known what a small percentage of the engines in the state are actually burning oil. This order of the Southern Pacific implies the consumption of ten times the amount of oil now being used and President Hays says that the engines are now being equipped as fast as they can be spared from the service. It now appears to be a fact that the whole productive power of the California oil fields is provided for, without taking into consideration those enterprises whose consumptive ability is unknown and in the course of a few months new developments must be made to provide fuel to supply the actual demand that is waiting upon it.

There is in this condition nothing that should prompt the public to rush indiscriminately into the oil fields of California for speculative purposes, but there is every reason to believe that a healthy growth and remunerative prices will obtain, and this great industry that has done so much for the state and made so many fortunes for its citizens is entering upon another period of substantial growth and unexampled prosperity.

The figures here used are taken from the Los Angeles Herald.

WILL THEY CONSOLIDATE?

Indications Point to a Consolidation of the Interests of the Mint, Mollie Dwyre and Pointer Companies---Some Reasons.

Those well posted in the mining world say that there can be but one outcome to the controversy between the Pointer and Mollie Dwyre companies and that is for the two to consolidate their interests and include in the consolidation the property of the Mint company.

The Gold hill properties of the three companies are all contiguous and cover about 28½ acres of valuable patented ground. The largest holdings are owned by the Mint company and are included in the Keystone and Irish Molly claims covering 17.642 acres; the Molly Dwyre company owns the Molly Dwyre, 7.132 acres and the Pointer company portions of the Shark and Pointer claims, 2½ acres.

The management of the Pointer company has been criticised for distributing dividends from the profits earned and not adding to the treasury fund. The excuse is, however, that the company has sufficient ore in sight to maintain dividends for six or nine months, and that after that the work will be carried on through the Mint shaft so that no large treasury fund will be required.

The shaft on the Pointer is now down 525 feet and is not a very large one. To continue deeper would mean a new and much larger shaft which would be very expensive and, as the management thinks, unnecessary. The Mint shaft is at no great distance and Pointer ground can be readily worked through it and in this way are the Pointer and Mint companies tied closely together.

On the other hand the Molly Dwyre and Pointer companies are in a fight over the apex rights to the vein which runs through all three properties. Geologically speaking these fights do not last any great number of rounds but end in a draw or in other words, a compromise. This, it would seem, is what will happen to the three companies named and there is excellent ground for the belief that sooner or later it will come about.

STRATTON'S INDEPENDENCE TREBLY INTERESTING

Shaft Now 1180 Feet Deep and Going Deeper---Level at 1150 Feet Extended 1100 Feet to the South---Developments Being Watched With Great Interest.

The development and prospecting work now in progress in the Stratton's Independence group, south of Battle mountain, is trebly interesting.

The work being done is deeper and further to the south than ever before and the question one awaits for results to answer are about as follows:

What will be the result to the Stratton's Independence company of the present work being done?

Will the ore bodies show up well at depth and add life and fame to the Cripple Creek district?

What will the development work show and will new ore bodies be opened up?

Deep work in the Portland and Gold Coin mines, which are neighboring properties, show splendid results at over 1,000 feet and as deep as they go so there is no fear as to what Stratton's Independence will do. The developments to the south, however, are something new and, naturally enough, the future is looked forward to with a great deal of interest.

The main shaft in the great mine is now down 1,180 feet and sinking is being continued. At 1,150 feet a station was cut out and a drift extended to the south, a distance of 1,100 feet, taking the workings well towards the Independence south end line. The drift was run along a phonolite dike and the discovery of ore was not expected. Cross cutting has, however, now been started and 20 feet of progress have been made. It is in this crosscut work that veins and probably ore bodies will be encountered and it is with this end in view that the work is being pushed.

Production from the mine continues at the rate of about 200 tons per day, the values running from $35 to $40 per ton. This averages up gross from about $200,000 to $250,000 per month.

A blue new hoister has been ordered together with other machinery and equipment. It is intended to keep the property thoroughly up to date as its first owner did.

GOOD WORK OF LESSEES

Many Shipments--More Activity in the Leasing System--Data Given Below.

The drift on the 800-foot level of the Findley and Mountain Beauty has been run on Mountain Beauty ground for 60 feet. In this distance ore was found for but 15 feet.

The ore is of good grade, but of limited width. The length of the body is disappointing. That the shoot will afford 100 feet of stoping ground there can be but little doubt, as it is exposed on the level above, where its length is much greater.

On the 800-foot level values are mainly concentrated in a streak of manganese that assays 18 ounces to the ton. The streak is too narrow to be shot alone with success. Its values are saved through screening and in this way ore is secured that runs four ounces to the ton.

Messrs. Steelsmith and Weaver, the lessees, have expectations of better things farther along the vein. This lady, it is remembered, has a length of 400 feet in the Mountain Beauty block and but 60 feet of it has been explored on the new level.

Lessee W. P. K. Hedrick, working the Rocky Mountain, on the west slope of Bratton hill, has started an upraise on a five-foot vein which he believes to be the Tillery lead.

The work is being done in the 200-foot level at a distance of about 210 feet east of the shaft. The pay streaks in the vein consist of shoots six or seven inches in width along the foot wall. Assays from these ore bodies give values of from $8 to $58.80 to the ton.

The pay mineral is in phonolite quartz and the lessee thinks that the ore will widen out as the vein is developed upward and drifted upon. The lessee will shortly commence saving ore from the streaks.

Lessee McDade, operating on the Pharmacy property, is saving ore. He has now about 12 tons in his bins and when this has accumulated to about 25 tons a shipment will be made. The ore is estimated to return about $40 to the ton.

Shell & Co., who are leasing on the Jack Rabbit of the Isabelle company, are drifting at a depth of 200 feet, and in 20 feet more expect to cut the position of the vein and dike from which they had good assays in the level above.

Harcourt & Painter, lessees on the Little Nell, on Raven hill, made another shipment today from shaft No. 3 that went $80 to the ton. This is the third shipment sent out from this lease. Returns from the former shipments give a value of $51 to the ton.

Cambell & Pullen, leasing on the Gregory of the old Raven group, are getting a good shipment every week from the 200-foot level and are doing a large amount of prospecting. The old Raven tunnel from Squaw gulch is being worked by Tillery & Co., who have a lease on a block of the Raven ground.

Puckett & Putnam, who have a sublease on a portion of the Camilla on Guyot hill from the Camilla Leasing company have opened a new vein in a surface trench and are getting assays up to $100 a ton. The find lacks development, but it is in a portion of the camp which has thrown a large amount of high grade [illegible] believe they have opened the vein from which it came.

Whiting [illegible] placer expires the first of July. The lessees are now making a clean-up in case their negotiations for an extension are not carried through. It is understood that the Independence Consolidated company is preparing to give them another two years' lease on this block if they agree to the necessary terms. The lease is on the old Vaughn & Christian workings and has been a very profitable one.

THE LUCRATIVE MUDDLE IS STRAIGHTENED

Stockholders Will Receive Share for Share in a New Company---Stock Listed With the Mining Exchange.

All the stockholders of the Lucrative Mining company will be glad to learn that the tangled affairs of the company have all been straightened out and a settlement is to be reached that is satisfactory to all parties concerned. Furthermore the listing committee of the exchange have passed favorably upon the company's affairs and the titles and it is listed on the exchange.

The position assigned it is in the preferred prospects. This mine has not produced quite enough to date to be placed in the mines list, otherwise it would occupy that position.

In order to facilitate a satisfactory settlement concerning the trouble about the stock, the company is to declare a stock dividend of one share for every share now outstanding.

The following notice has been sent by Mr. J. H. House, the secretary of the company, to stockholders:

To the Stockholders of the Lucrative Mining Company:

Notice is hereby given that a stock dividend of one share of the capital stock of the Lucrative Consolidated Mining company for each share of the outstanding stock of the Lucrative Mining company, has this day been declared by the board of directors of the Lucrative Mining company, payable on Friday, July 26, 1901, to stockholders of record July 22, 1901 at 12 o'clock noon, books for the transfer of stock will close July 22, 1901, at 12 o'clock noon.

By order of the board of directors.

J. H. House, Sec'y and Treas.

The property of this company located in Sagauche county is well known to the mining men of this city for it was visited by a number last year when it was in the hands of its former management. The property is being actively worked at present; development work is being done and shipments are made from time to time. Recently a shipment of one carload of ore was made and the returns were $100.

With the energetic development of the company's holdings under the present able management and the excellent showings in the workings the Lucrative Mining company is soon expected to be a steady and permanent shipper.

FINAL PAYMENT MADE

The Centurion G. M. Co. Now Owns Four More Claims in the Clear Creek District---Pay Ore Has Been Opened Up.

Messrs. Russell Prentice & Co. of this city have made the last payment on a group of four claims, which have been added to the already substantial holdings of the Centurion Gold Mining company.

The company now owns a group of eleven properties, located about four miles north of Idaho Springs in the Clear Creek mining district. They are properties with excellent prospects and are now being developed by tunnel.

The four claims recently added to the holdings are the Iron Mask, Miners Dream, Evening Star and Dandy. Through one of these a tunnel has been driven for the purpose of developing property beyond and the work discloses a good looking vein of pay ore, cut at a depth of about 150 feet from the surface.

The company's other claims are known as the Centurion, Gold Wing, 1901, Lena, Darum, Lilly and Spur Daisy. Just below the Iron Mask the company's tunnel is started and has been contracted to be run for a distance of 1,000 feet. The contractors are now working with a good force of men and talk of erecting a steam plant for the purpose of mining the [illegible] more rapidly with power drills.

The Centurion vein is an extension of the well-known Donaldson vein, which has a production record of $500,000. The vein dips rapidly towards the tunnel and will be cut, it is expected, in a distance of 200 feet. The management is of the opinion that between the Iron Mask and the Gold Wing, which represent the northerly and southerly limits of the company's property, a good assay vein will be cut. Donaldson mountain, upon which this group of properties is located, is noted for its gold-bearing veins and the development work which has been outlined should bring good results.

CABLE CONSOLIDATED BASIS

The Cable Consolidated Mining company is a corporation not very often heard of or written about, but it owns a group of valuable and well-located property in the Cripple Creek district, and is well officered and managed.

The company owns a compact piece of ground covering 18 acres patented on Beacon hill, adjoining the Prince Albert, Gold Dollar and other well known properties. The claims are known as the St. Peter, Aztec, All Right, Cable and Posey, all in the southeast quarter of section 25.

Beacon hill has come into such great and deserved prominence of late that there has been a steady demand for leases in that section. Among the many good opportunities Cable Consolidated has not been overlooked and now a lease has been granted on this territory to P. W. Esteb, the man who first opened up ore on the Mable Mc and Zoe properties on the same hill.

Mr. Esteb was in the city yesterday closing up a contract with the Power company for an electric hoist, which is to be placed over the main workings. In one of the shafts $30 ore has been discovered, but the principal development work on the ground will be done from another point.

Three sets of sub-lessees have already arranged to work on the property.

THE COLORADO SPRINGS MINING STOCK EXCHANGE

Colorado Springs June 22.—The market opened with good trading but it soon became evident that there was a larger demand for the lower priced stocks than there was for those in the higher priced stocks. Consequently the greatest activity was in properties in the unclassified and miscellaneous sections while weakness in the base and all which showed considerable strength were Missouri, Cripple Creek, Mollie Gibson and Strong on the strength of an unexpected strike while Portsmouth has not offered any consumption. The Mollie stock rose from 9¾ to 10 with the demand at the close. Mollie Gibson opened at 8½ and closed at 9. The mines Doctor Jack Pot showed a slight weakness, tendency. It opened 2 cents below the close of the previous call and sold down to 6 a little over a Dollar. Cripple Creek sold from 15 to 18 at Mollie Gibson sold at 9. Golden Eagle went up to 6. C. C. Consolidated opened in good demand, the former went from 2.25 to 2.35 and the latter from 15¾ to 16. Trading in the unclassified was much better than usual, stocks in general holding their own. Cripple Creek stock has been getting up in interesting fortnight days, from 1¾ to 1¾. Alabama cent over the close. Strong for the day. National declined 1¾ to 4¾. Sullivan was 9¾. Shannon 2 and Lookout a fraction higher.

The total number of sales for the day were 660 shares, for which the following prices were made: This is a good list of trading for Saturday with one call but the cash value was slight.

The total amount of sales for the whole week was 2,400 shares and the cash total $358.10.

THE 126th ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL

THE 126th anniversary of the battle of Bunker hill was celebrated in noteworthy manner on Monday afternoon last. On that occasion members of the Zebulon Pike chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and guests, in all about 60, were entertained by the newly-elected vice regent, Mrs. Walter C. Frost, at her home 118 E. Caramillo street.

In the United States already there are fully 3,500 members and the accessions to membership, monthly, averages 200. The local chapter is in a very prosperous condition and many new names will doubtless be added during the present year.

The guests of honor on Monday were Mrs. Wheaton, wife of General Frank Wheaton, one of the 10 national vice president-generals, and Mrs. W. W. Brownell, a member of Gaspee chapter, Rhode Island, D. A. R. Flags, bunting and palms were used in decorating the apartments. The program began with the singing of America, led by Mrs. H. H. Seldomridge.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cass Goddard had been invited to prepare a paper upon the subject of the 17th of June previous to the battle of Bunker hill. In her research, Mrs. Goddard failed to find anything history-making on that day prior to the renowned June 17, 1775, so she wrote most interestingly of the types of character existing among women in this country during the 18th century that moulded and influenced the heroes who responded to the call to arms on the most memorable 17th of June in the history of America.

Mrs. Goddard's paper, in full, was:

"Madam Regent and Members of the Zebulon Pike Chapter, D. A. R.:

"It is difficult to imagine ourselves in the position of those to whom the battle of Bunker hill was an unknown event. We are so accustomed to think of it as an occurrence with a well defined place in history that it is almost impossible to consider it was fought with the momentous consequences that followed it. And yet I have been asked to try to bring you in touch with the years preceding the 17th of June, 1775, so that we may gain a clearer apprehension of the conditions before that date.

"Speaking to the Daughters of the American Revolution it is material that I should give particular attention to the great influence exerted by women in this country in the 17th and 18th centuries.

"Early Puritan customs bore a large part in the formation of the sturdy character of the women of those days. Stern self-repressment was the keynote of the period, and even the babies had [illegible] lessons in [illegible]. Education was a potent factor and many a little life was offered as a sacrifice to the Spartan demands of the fakh. Regardless of winter wind, or cold or snow, the baby was carried to church the first Sabbath after its birth, and on January 22, 1734, Judge Sewall thus records in his diary: "A very extraordinary storm by reason of the falling and driving of the snow. Few women could get to meeting. A child named Alexander was baptized in the afternoon." Of Judge Sewall's 14 children but three survived him, a majority dying in infancy. Perhaps here we may apply the principle of the survival of the fittest. The medical fraternity of the present day would stand appalled at the nostrums, remedies and disgusting recipes for all sorts of infantile complaints. Beginning with the ordeal of baptism, at a very early age, the doctrine of original sin was preached, and instances are given of deep heart searchings, weeping for unrepented sin, and finally of conversion of children before five or six years old. The pious and ingenious Jane Turell, at four, could say the greater part of the assembly's catechism, and repeat many of the psalms.

"Fancy being in daily contact with such precocious sanctity. Amusements were rare. Skating and playing wicket on Boston common were the relaxations of the boys. The stately minuet danced to the dim light of candles by the demure little Boston maids, with the music of two sober fiddles was the wildest dissipation of the period. Lemonpill candy, angelica candy, candied sryngo root and carraway comfits, with strings of rock candy, took the place of the dazzling and beautiful array of our modern confectioners' shops. They had prunes and figs and native fruits, but not of the same quality as now. At an early age both boys and girls were sent to "grammar schools," and girls were carefully taught to cook, to spin to weave and to knit. In 1716 fine works were taught, such as feather work, filigree and painting on glass. Many of the fruits of these labors have come down to us in samplers. The children were respectful and deeply honored their parents.

"With such surroundings, amid the rigors of the New England climate, a type of character was formed in which was deeply implanted the love of and devotion to duty. Personal comfort, self-indulgence and all the enervating customs of modern life had no part in moulding those sturdy natures.

"By inheritance, by birth — and by training, women were fitted to bear their part in the stirring scenes that were to give birth to a new nation. In spite of the supposed spirit of subordination, they did not hesitate to assert themselves. The agitation in favor of woman's suffrage as begun at an early date in the colonies. In Maryland this record is made in 1647-48: Came Margaret Brent and requested to vote in the house, for herself and Voyce Allsoe, for that on the last court 3rd January it was ordered that the said Mrs. Brent was to be looked upon in I received as his lordship's (Baltimore) attorney. The governor denyd that the s'd Mrs. Brent should have any vote in the house. And the s'd Mrs. Brent protested against all proceedings in this present assembly unless she may be present and have vote as aforesaid." Thus two centuries and a half ago this remarkable woman made her demands for her full rights, and in 1658 she vanishing sweetheart yet standing out of colonial history the most forceful, clear-cut figure of the 17th century in Maryland.

"Almost every colony had its representative woman of affairs. Elizabeth Haddon, when but 19 years of age—in 1701—volunteered to come alone to New Jersey and settle upon a tract of land belonging to her father, and became the founder of Haddonfield.

"In Virginia John Clayton, writing as early as 1688, tells of several acute ingenious gentlewomen who carried on thriving tobacco plantations, draining swamps and raising cattle. One became a fig raiser. This state of affairs obtained in many of the colonies, and in Pennsylvania, Mary Sewell took 2500 acres of land in what is now Lancaster county.

"Such independence was not encouraged in New England, and Governor Endicott wrote that it was best to abandon the custom of granting 'maid lots' to single women. Mrs. Davenport, wife of Rev. John Davenport, seems to have had control of the affairs of Governor John Winthrop, Jr., and the letters of her husband, "That her care for her friend's welfare, and the variety of her business duties.

"The newspaper woman is not the product of modern times. I may be pardoned for speaking with pride of Sarah Goddard, who was an ancestress of my husband. After becoming a widow she went into the printing business with her son, William Goddard, who was postmaster of Providence in 1765. They published the Providence Gazette and County Journal, and later she conducted the business alone under the name of Sarah Goddard Company. William Goddard afterwards moved to Philadelphia, and then to Baltimore, where he bought the Maryland Journal, and while he was away in the interests of establishing a private system of postoffices, he left the newspaper and printing house solely in the charge of his sister, Mary Catherine Goddard, the worthy daughter of a worthy mother. She had a practical knowledge of the world, being an expert compositor of types. It was a curious fact that, on the eve of the revolution, so many southern newspapers were conducted by women.

"Anna Catherine Green & Son resumed the publication of the Maryland Gazette, suspended, on account of the stamp act of 1765. From 1733 to 1740, Elizabeth Timothy, a Charleston woman, the widow of Louis Timothy and publisher of the South Carolina Gazette, carried on that paper after her husband's death, and was succeeded by her son Peter Timothy. His sister also edited a paper set up in opposition to the stamp act, called the South Carolina Gazette and Country Journal.

"Anne Franklin, widow of James Franklin, and her two daughters successfully carried on the business in Newport after the death of James Franklin in 1735. This industrious trio of women not only published the Newport Mercury, but were printers for the colony. Boston women gave much assistance to their printer husbands. It was a woman, Margaret Draper, who published the only newspaper edited in Boston during the siege. When we realize so few in number were the newspapers of that period, we can see what influence was wielded by women.

"Our great grandmothers were alive, alert and interested in the affairs of the colonies. Through their sailor kinsfolk and friends the supply they command ed, they were closely in touch with the coast of Africa, the West Indies, Amsterdam and Canton, and no doubt listened to many heated discussions of the politics of the day. No more practical woman ever lived in America than Eliza Lucas Pinckney. When a young girl she resided on a plantation at Wappoo, South Carolina, owned by her father. He was governor of Antigua, and observing her fondness for botany, sent her many tropical seeds of the indigo plant. She made two unsuccessful attempts to bring them to perfection, planting them first in 1741. After the third trial which succeeded, her father sent over an experienced indigo worker named Cromwell, and in spite of his duplicity, by careful watching, Miss Lucas obtained a knowledge of the complex methods of extracting indigo. When she became Mrs. Pinckney, in 1753, she carried to England enough silk fabric which she had raised and spun and woven herself in the city of Charleston, to make "three fine gowns," one of which was presented to the princess dowager of Wales.

"I might take much more of your time in citing instances of the energy and many-sided ability, the indomitable perseverance and unflinching courage of these women, but I am sure I have said enough. I know that to them there was 'no such word as fail.' In whatever walk of life, whether engaged in the pursuit of business, in literary tasks, carrying on large interests, or taking up the occupation of father or husband cut off in the midst of a useful career, their lives were marked by a faithful devotion to whatever came to them. This could not but have its effect upon the children, born and nurtured amid such surroundings.

"The women of the colonies were deeply stirred by the injustice and tyranny of the mother country and ready to manifest their displeasure by making homespun garments, by gathering in patriotic bands to spin, and by signing compacts to drink no more tea. We can imagine, on these occasions how the conservative ran on the sacrifices of their ancestors for the sake of the liberty then being denied to them; how they encouraged and stimulated one another by tales of early privations borne for this object, and shall we wonder that these mothers went back to their own homes fired with zeal and with the determination to preserve their independence at all costs?

"We are not the pioneers in the organization of patriotic societies, for the first fruit of the agitation was in 1766 —when 17 young ladies met at the house of Elder Ephraim Bowen in Providence. They spent all day for the public benefit, and assumed the name 'Daughters of Liberty.' The next meeting was held in the court house—as the members of the little band had so increased in numbers. A list of the members has been preserved and the names embraced all the most beautiful girls for which Newport was so justly celebrated. As a result of the meetings the president and the first graduating class of Brown university were clothed in American homespun. These bands of patriotic women were scattered all through New England, and at one time 70 linen wheels were employed. Religion and patriotism went hand in hand, and it was no uncommon thing, after a polite and generous repast of American production, to be entertained with a sermon. One text was from Exodus 35th chapter, 25th verse: "And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands." Another was from Romans, 12-11: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." It was but a step from such meetings to private and then public agreements to abstain totally from the use of tea, entered with first by the 'Mistresses of families in this town' (Boston), and then followed by the young ladies in a compact expressed in the following verses:

"Farewell the tea-board, with its china coalpage,
Cups and saucers, cream picket, sugar, tongs, spoons,
The pretty tea chest, also lately stored
With Hyson, Congo and best double dye,
Full many a gorgeous moment have I sat by you
Hearing the girls tattle and the old maids talk scandal,
And the spruce coxcomb laugh at may-be-nothing.
Though not detestable,
Because I am taught (and I believe it true)
Its use will fasten slavish chains upon my country,
To reign triumphant in America."

"Little Anna Winslow writes in February, 1771, that she bought a hat of White Holland: "As I am, as we say, a 'Daughter of Liberty,' I choose to wear as much of our own manufactory as possible."

"The following extract from a letter to a British officer, written by a Philadelphia woman, shows the same readiness to practice self-denial: "I have not drank since last Christmas. Nor have I bought a cap or gown since your defeat at Lexington. I have learned to knit and am now making stockings of wool for my servants. In this way do I now throw in my mite for public good. I know this, that as free I can die but once, but as a slave I shall not be worthy of life. I have the pleasure to assure you that these are the sentiments of my sister Americans."

"The North Carolina Daughters of Liberty pledged themselves not to receive addresses from any recreant suitors who had not responded to their country's call. The women of the south were fired with patriotism and on October 25, 1774, 51 spirited dames assembled at the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth King, at Edenton, North Carolina, passed resolutions commending the resolutions of the provincial congress and declared that they would not conform to "that pernicious custom of drinking tea, or that the aforesaid ladies would not promote ye wear of any manufacture from England" until the tax was repealed. The names of these ladies have not been preserved, but a few are known. The president was Mrs. Penelope Barker, thrice a widow, hence not afraid of any man; so when the British soldiers invaded her stables to seize her horses she snatched the sword of one of her husbands from the wall, with one blow severed the reins and drove the horses back into the stables, and kept them, too.

"Liberty was in the air, in the heart, in the mind. Not license, but the burning desire to live according to one's sense of right, to assert one's individuality. It was the search for liberty that first promoted the Pilgrim fathers to seek a home on the inhospitable coast of bleak New England. 'Freedom to worship God,' was what they desired, and the years of privation, of toil, the days of watchfulness, the nights by night during the fearful times of Indian hostilities, begat a dependence upon God, a purity of life, a keen appreciation of responsibility. These all contributed their share toward the formation of a type of character that molded and influenced the men who were to respond to the call to arms on the 17th of June—men who prayed as they fought, to the God of their fathers, and who waited until prayer had been offered by the chaplain before they set out on their enterprise on that fateful morning.

"I cannot close without asking how we, as 'Daughters of the American Revolution,' are carrying on the work laid down by the 'Daughters of Liberty?' Are we actuated by the same spirit of self-sacrifice, the same absolute devotion to duty, the same high courage, the same unflinching determination to abide in the 'fear of the Lord,' which is 'the beginning of wisdom?' Only by holding fast to these ideals shall we be able to do our part towards preserving that liberty for which they prayed and lived and died—and which they transmitted to us as our most precious heritage."

The paper was enthusiastically complimented as a most excellent contribution to the enjoyable gathering.

Mrs. H. H. Seldomridge beautifully rendered the patriotic "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," all joining in the refrain, "Three cheers for the red, white and blue," etc.

Miss Bessie Slaughter played the melody very pleasingly upon her violin for each musical number, except when Mrs. Seldomridge rendered with great expression the sweet, favorite, old descriptive song, "The Sword of Bunker Hill."

Mrs. Hatch, an ex-vice regent, by request made a concise statement of the qualifications and steps necessary to be taken to secure membership in the D. A. R.

As a finale to the fine program, Mrs. Seldomridge, assisted by those present, stirringly rendered "Yankee Doodle."

Mrs. [illegible] served an ample refreshments, each guest receiving as a souvenir a small flag.

IS GOING TO MILWAUKEE

THE COLORADO MIDLAND BAND

IT MAY GO TO BUFFALO

ONE of the Colorado Midland band's next triumphs will probably be at the Buffalo exposition. The fame of Colorado Springs' fine musical organization is extending, and negotiations are now on between the officials of the Pan-American exposition and the management of the band to have the "Indians" appear in Buffalo some time in September. Before that time, however, the band will visit Milwaukee with the Colorado delegation to the Elks' big celebration.

The Midland band is the greatest musical organization of the west. It was organized only a few years ago and its development has been the source of much interest in Colorado Springs, where the band, by its public concerts, has become remarkably popular. The band was first composed of amateurs, and had success from the start. It was not, however, until the services of Prof. H. T. Irvine were secured as director that its reputation extended beyond the boundaries of this state. The musicians are now the pick from all sections of the country.

The instrumentation is excellent. There have recently been added to the equipment two instruments, one of which, a bass saxaphone, is the only of its kind in America. The other is a double B flat Sousaphone, of which there are only four in this country. The Sousaphone was made for Fred O. Palmer, who was one of the members of the Colorado First Regiment band, which was with the soldiers of the state at the fall of Manila, Aug. 13, 1898.

The band made its greatest hit away from home at the Democratic convention in Kansas City last summer. The members expect to repeat this triumph at Milwaukee during the week beginning July 29, and in Buffalo two months later.

The band is composed as follows: H. T. Irvine, director; Low Rose, flute; G. Fehringer, piccolo; M. McCarty, Eb clarinet; Fred Kelley, Bb clarinet; H. West, Bb clarinet; Robert Shroeder, Bb clarinet; G. Kaylor, Bb clarinet; N. Falk, Bb clarinet; H. Hotchkiss, Eb clarinet; John Lopez, Bb clarinet; G. S. Maxwell, solo cornet; Albert Bach, Bb cornet; Scott Dabbins, Bb cornet; Alonzo Garcia, Bb cornet; J. Hickman, Bb cornet; H. P. Robinson, C. Dipp, R. Shroyer, saxaphone; J. Bibb, bass saxaphone; C. Tubby, Charles Bogue, George F. Green, William Jones, horn; John Kelley, Charles Bailey, Roy Mclain, F. Bothin, trombone; Roy Shantz, euphonium; Will Fulton, tuba; E. O. Palmer, sousaphone; George Phillips, small drum; Al. Jeancon, tympans; R. W. Hemenway, bass drum; W. R. Hulf, drum major; W. H. Bosworth, Indian major; Frank Flanagan, librarian.

CHARLES A. BAILEY,
President of the Midland Band.

H. T. IRVINE,
Director of the Colorado Midland Band.

H. P. ROBINSON,
Secretary and Treasurer of the Colorado Midland Band.

GEORGE F. GREEN,
Manager of the Colorado Midland Band.

The Elks' Street Fair and Carnival in Cripple Creek.

The accompanying illustration gives but a small idea of the imposing magnificence of the grand entrance to the Elks' street fair and carnival to be held in Cripple Creek, Colorado, July 15 to 20, next.

This magnificent piece of architecture will be the product of the skill of one of the best architects in the state of Colorado. It will first be built in sections and then painted by a competent artist. The two gilded domes will be finely executed and the front will be covered by fifteen hundred (1500) incandescent lights. In arranging these lights extreme care will be taken to derive all the magnificent color effects possible. These, in connection with many arcs, will make a spectacle long to be remembered.

The interest that the local merchants are taking in the booth display to be made at the fair indicates that some of the displays will be equal in artistic beauty, to those of the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo.

Booth space is being rapidly engaged, and many of the merchants are combining their displays, so as to make them complete in every detail. One instance, worth mentioning, is the combination of a wall paper house, a plumbing firm, a furniture firm and an electrician. The wall paper man will paper ten booths in elegant style, each booth being different in design; the furniture house will then furnish in the most elaborate style, a complete four room house; the electrician will then wire the booths, and make the best display possible of every conceivable kind of electrical devices; the ever-ready plumber will then install bath tubs, wash stands and everything else that goes to make a house complete with modern plumbing.

One of the largest breweries will have the exhibit that attracted so much attention at the World's fair in Chicago in 1893. This is an exact reproduction of their plant and is a mechanical wonder, which will doubtless be one of the leading features of the fair. One of Kansas' largest flour mills will also make a magnificent exhibit.

No fair or exposition since the World's fair is complete without its midway. The midway features will surpass anything of the kind ever before gotten together. It will be comprised of 13 of the highest class attractions that can possibly be secured. The animal show, under the management of Frank C. Bostock, the animal king, who has the animal show at the Buffalo exposition, will consist of 15 cages of trained wild animals. Wallace, the famous untamable lion, and Ragah, the wonderful tiger, will be among the features of this show. R. H. Bullard's celebrated electric fountain, which created such a favorable impression at one of Kansas City's most prominent parks, will be located at the end of the midway.

The Kansas City Star says of this fountain: "It is undoubtedly one of the cleanest and most artistic exhibitions that the ingenuity of the electrician of modern times has been able to conceive." The mechanical wonder, Jerusalem, is the result of 12 years' patient and persistent labor on the part of a cabinet maker of Warraw, Ill., who, after seeing the famous Strausburg clock, conceived the idea of making a mechanical wonder that would excel this in every particular. That he has done so is conceded by both press and public.

Hoso, the snake wonder, will also be among the many attractions. This is the original Hoso, and not one of his many imitators, who have lost either reason or limb in endeavoring to reproduce this wonderful act.

The 60-foot Ferris wheel, is made of bicycle tubing, is an exact reproduction of the famous wheel of that name. This feature of the Midway is most liberally patronized on account of the excellent view that it affords one of the entire street fair.

Rolla, the card wonder, is a new feature, introduced on midways, and his round act interests everyone.

The Streets of Cairo is unquestionably one of the strongest attractions of its kind in the United States today. It comes in its own special cars, under the personal management of B. Delgerian, who had the Streets of Cairo concession at the World's fair. They bring with them two camels, whirling dervishers, sword fighters, Turkish wrestlers and magicians, dancers, and in fact—specialists in every one of their interesting customs.

The German village will be an attraction which will be appreciated by every one who visits the fair, as here a delightful vaudeville show will be given and refreshments of all kinds will be served.

The Gypsy camp is under the personal supervision of Leo Reno, who created such a sensation at the Elks fair given in Denver last year. This will be pleasing news to many who struggled through the crush and endeavored to reach him in Denver, but failed.

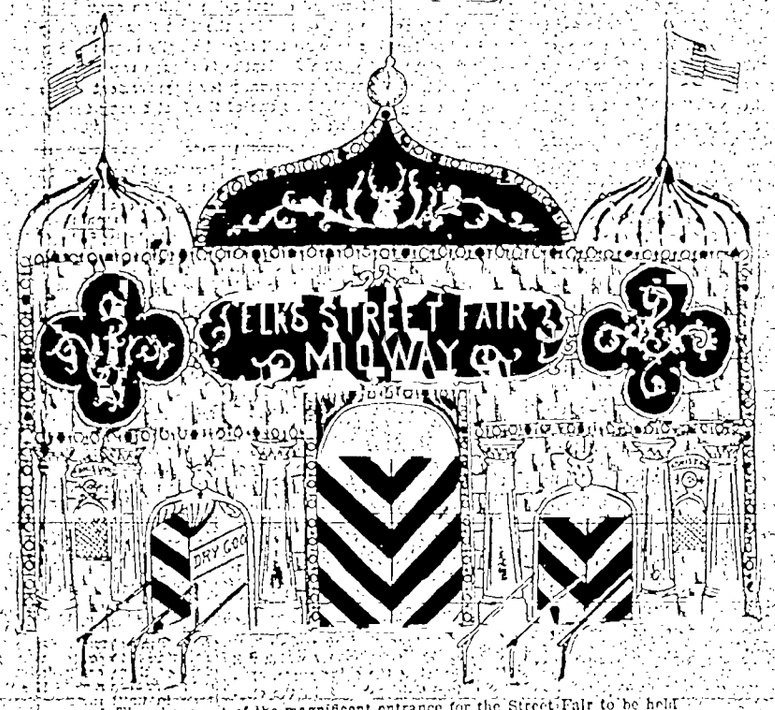
The other shows of the Midway are strictly up-to-date in every particular and consist of the following:

The telescope of beauty, the Electric theater, mystic swing, Lunette, Turkish theater, the camels, moving pictures and dog circus.

At an interval of every thirty minutes, there will be given on Exhibit street in front of the merchants' displays, a free show; this program will be made up from a finely selected corps of vaudeville artists.

The crowning free feature will be the performance of Lionel Legare, who performs on a sixty-foot illumined tower, going through some of the most sensational feats ever seen. This feature cost the Elks $500 alone, and is conceded by theatrical managers to be the best, as well as the highest-priced aerial attraction in the world.

To spend the day at this fair will be an education to all, and the many wonderful features at the fair will reflect credit upon the management.



The above cut of the magnificent entrance for the Street Fair to be held in Cripple Creek under the auspices of the Elks lodge July 15 to 20, gives but scant idea of the magnificence of the structure. The management has spared no expense to make this the finest thing ever seen in the city. The principal dome will be solid purple, trimmed in white with a gilt elk's head; the two smaller domes will be gilded. The entire front will be of oriental design, decorated in purple and white, and illuminated with hundreds of purple and white electric lights, making it an objective point worth coming many miles to see.

Colorado Wild Flowers

H. L. SHANTZ.

A great majority of the plants growing in this region are what are called xerophites, or plants growing in soil where there is little moisture. Plants of this group have as a rule very large roots in proportion to the size of the plant above ground, and these reach far down in order to gather what little water may be found. The main roots generally divide or send off smaller roots which may again divide. On the small roots are found the root-hairs which are very small and so numerous that much more root surface is given than the surface of the plant above ground. Nutriment can only be taken into the plant when in solution, and it is through these root-hairs that the water is chiefly taken up. In dry soil the water occurs only in a minute layer on the surface of each soil particle. The root-hairs penetrate between and bend around these particles so that they may come in contact with as great an area of surface as possible. In this layer of water are held in solution the salts and substances which are necessary for the plant's growth, and these are taken into the plant by the root-hairs.

These plants are not only especially provided for getting water where but little is to be found, but they are also especially adapted to retain the water once obtained. In a dry climate like ours a plant loses moisture rapidly by transpiration through the surface of the stems, leaves and flowers. The exposure of the fresh green leaves and stems would mean that the roots must supply a great amount of water. But this they cannot do for they are not sufficiently supplied with water themselves. Such conditions would be disastrous to the plant and it therefore protects itself against the loss of the water which is so difficult to obtain. This is effected in many different ways. The surface is often diminished by the leaves being very small and presenting little surface for evaporation; as is the case in the flax. Others are thick and fleshy and retain the moisture once obtained as does the Tradescantia. In some the surface is thickly set with plant-hairs which serve as a protection against evaporation. Another means employed is that of forming a cuticle which covers the entire surface and only allows the air to pass in freely at the breathing-pores or stomata. It is on account of the use of these means of protection that we do not have the bright green color in our western landscape that is found where there is greater moisture.

Both plants shown this week are dry soil plants and in several ways illustrate the things mentioned above. The plant with the slender stem and small, narrow leaf is the perennial flax. It grows abundantly throughout the whole Rocky mountain region, and is always found in dry soil. It presents but little surface for transpiration and this surface is more or less covered by a cuticle. It has a large showy flower which has clear blue petals like those of the cultivated flax. The flower is regular and symmetrical, the parts being five numerous. These large blue flowers on the slender, nodding stems are very attractive, and because of its beauty and airy grace it is often cultivated in the flower garden. Its name is linum perenne, L. and it belongs to the flax family which is only represented in the Rocky mountain region by two species beside the one shown.

The other plant is Tradescantia Virginica L. and belongs to the great group called monocotyledons, as is shown by the parallel vined leaves. It is also a xerophite. The stems are thick and herbaceous and when broken excrete a viscid slime, while the leaves, which are also thick, are grass-like in form, tapering from the sheathing base to the point. The flowers are generally in terminal umbles and stay open only a part of one day. They are very delicate and beautiful, having but three petals which are in color a bluish purple, sometimes varying to almost a pure pink. The three stamens have each a tuft of purple hairs which are most beautiful and at the same time instructive objects of microscopic study, since in them we can see how circulation takes place in the cell of the plant.

This plant contains a great amount of water in its stems, and does not give it up readily as is shown when we attempt to press it. Although it is of no value as a cut flower it is very often cultivated, especially in the east where it is often found in old gardens. A closely related species—the Wandering Jew, which is a tradescantia, is one of our most common basket plants. It will stand dust, dryness, the extremes of temperature and more abuse than almost any other plant.

A Tip to Girls.

"In the development of a girl colony in New York it often happens that the members as they grow busy with other things, leave more and more to the manager, until finally she has virtual charge of all matters, temporal and financial, relating to the community life. Her board is too small remuneration for the work she does, and she becomes a paid housekeeper, and establishes a new kind of girl colony in which one person has all the responsibility, leaves the apartment or apartments, and takes the risk of losing or gaining by the venture, while the others pay a certain fixed sum and escape all the care and anxiety which cooperative housekeeping implies. These permanent households, whose existence depends on one stable person rather than on a fluctuating group of young women, are particularly convenient for girls who are to remain in New York only for a year or two, and who consequently do not wish to buy the stock in trade that housekeeping requires. The cost of the original outfit, is difficult to determine. It depends largely on the ambition of the group and the skill of their buyer. Subsequent expenses are also variable, but the following table of expenses is as nearly ideal as possible of the household expenditures for a month of eight girls in two apartments, living comfortably, and setting the kind of table they would have at home:

Rent for two apartments at $35 each	$70.00
Meat	22.00

Summum Bonum.

How blest is he that can but love and do,
And has no skill of speech nor trick of art
Wherewith to tell what faith approveth true,
And show for fame the treasures of his heart!
When, wisely weak, upon the path of duty
Divine accord has made his footing sure;
With humble deeds he builds his life to beauty,
Strong to achieve, and patient to endure.
But they that, in the marketplace, we meet,
Each with his trumpet and his noisy faction,
Are leaky vessels pouring on the street
The truth they know ere it has known its action.
And which, think-ye, in his benign regard,
Of words or deeds, shall merit the reward?

PROSPERITY IN COLORADO

COLORADO can no longer claim that it has no share in the prosperity that has extended over the country in the past few years. From nearly every part of the state comes a similar story of development and progress along many and varied lines.

One of the many instances of the change that is even now in progress is shown in the increased value of Colorado railway and industrial stocks for the past six months. The following table gives the quotations on six Colorado stocks on June 21 and the quotations on the same stocks six months previous:

	June 21	Dec. 21
Colorado Southern	15	8¾
Colorado Southern 1st Pfd	51	43¼
Colorado Southern 2d Pfd	6¾	1
I. & R. G.	37	28
I. & R. G. Pfd.	10	43¾
C. & S.	115	92

The six stocks here mentioned show in the six months an average increase in value of 50 per cent, and that too from a level where they were very much above the prices of calamity years.

Nothing could be more misleading than the idea that an increase of stock values of this kind is a benefit only to the stockholders. The stock value is very closely connected with the amount of business that is being done, and that involves in the case of the companies mentioned the number of passengers and the amount of freight carried, the number of persons employed in various departments, the amount of produce supplied by farmers and manufacturers and miners on one side and the amount of articles supplied for their use on the other. In the case of the fuel and iron company it involves the industrial welfare of an important part of the state and just materially relates to the prosperity of a kind of manufacturing and mining equipment.

Nor is the improvement thus demonstrated confined to a single section of the state or to a few of the larger cities. It extends throughout all our territory and it involves all classes of our people.

The signs of prosperity in Colorado are so numerous and so evident that it would seem needless to call attention to them if it were not for the fact that some seem to feel that they are still in the depths of woe and despondency and that it would be incompatible with their dignity to get out of their sackcloth long enough to learn that is measured precisely by the extent of their influence. For them and those who are guided by them the wave of opportunity will be past before they are ready to take advantage of it.

Fortunately for our people the majority of them are not of the croaking kind, and the evidences of marvelous growth and unprecedented progress are everywhere at the state.

THE OFFER TO THE ELKS

THE LATEST offer to the Elks for a national home to be located in Colorado Springs is of such a character that it ought to command a prompt acceptance. From a financial standpoint the offer is a liberal one and will insure the immediate opening of the home under circumstances favorable to its continued success.

But aside from that Colorado Springs can offer to the brotherhood what no other city of those who have contested for this prize can do. Colorado Springs is preeminently the resort city of the western United States and it offers as a bonus over and above anything that may be in the way of buildings, lands or cold cash those attractions that have summoned thousands of people from all parts of the earth and have built up here a city that cannot be surpassed anywhere for the combination of all the year climate, scenic magnificence and social and civic advantages. A city of the size of Colorado Springs of this character of population, equipped as Colorado Springs is, located in Colorado at the eastern foot of Pikes Peak and known throughout the world as an unrivaled health and pleasure resort, ought not to fear competition from the cities of the east except in the minds of those who are unfamiliar with the comparative circumstances.

All of these advantages are emphasized in the tract of land now offered. It is one of the most desirable locations in this neighborhood and if the Elks accept the offer they will count themselves fortunate in securing one of the most ideal and appropriate sites for such an institution that could be found anywhere in the United States.

A MELANCHOLY MUSE

A WRITER in one of our exchanges muses as per annex. The bible says that he who uses the sword shall perish by the sword. This is not in the form of a curse but merely a warning. The man who shall live as he lives, if he has lived a quiet and peaceful life he usually passes away quietly and peacefully. If he has been a man of violence and has shed many a blood [illegible] extend to the second generation as well. General Fitzhugh Lee who has spent the greater part of his life in the saddle on the field of battle has just received the sad intelligence that his son had been slain by a Filipino on a battlefield.

And if he had been there are actually some persons who would prefer to die fighting for the flag rather than to expire quietly and peacefully in inglorious ease.

And if there were not this kind of people life would not be much of a nation.

Alas, how sad!

Only—

The Lieutenant Lee who was killed was not the son of General Fitzhugh Lee.

AN ANNUAL LESSON

THE ANNUAL lesson in the danger of storing fireworks in care of unintelligent persons comes [illegible] this year. This time it was a Philadelphian who succeeded in blowing several of his neighbors to a more peaceful and possibly a better country than this. Now it is a New Jersey[illegible] who is accountable for the wrecking of a tenement house with its inmates.

[illegible] that the Gazette would ever interfere to prevent the celebration of the national birthday in the peculiarly Chinese fashion that we have adopted as our own. But it does seem that we ought to be able to find some method of protecting innocent people from unnecessary death and destruction.

If it were a question of sacrificing two or three tenement houses with their contents, organic and inorganic, on the altar of patriotism there might be room for some difference of opinion, but the worst of it is that the lives lost in Paterson this year and in Philadelphia a year ago contributed nothing towards the celebration of the Fourth and in fact in some cases at least, have produced the opposite effect.

[illegible] has already accumulated to prove the necessity of more stringent police regulations in regard to the handling and storing of fireworks especially in the larger cities. Such carelessness is not tolerated in other countries and experience has already shown that an open shop window filled with explosives cannot safely be left to the mercy of every passing street loiterer, either the ignorant foreigner a safe custodian of such weapons of mischief.

THE ELKS FAIR

IF THE Elks fair is bigger than all the rest of the Quarto-centennial combined it will not be the fault of the Elks. It will be the fault of Colorado Springs.

From the way in which the tribe is already pushing to the front in the matter we are fully warranted in announcing without reserve that the Quarto-centennial Elks fair will be the most soul stirring, heart thrilling, pulse quickening aggregation of wonders and marvels ever presented to the admiring gaze of awe-struck humanity within a thousand miles of Pikes Peak.

But while we are glad that the Elks are going to eclipse all former efforts in this line and are quite assured of their ability to do so we do not want the street fair to be the whole show in Quarto-centennial week.

If the citizens generally will take hold of the matter with half the energy that is being displayed by the Elks we will have a show here that Theodore Roosevelt will dream about for years to come.

DEMOCRATS VISIT THE PHILIPPINES

IF THE Democratic congressmen who are about to visit the Philippines go there with their minds and hearts open to instruction, serious benefit might result therefrom. That some of them will do this we do not doubt, and the opportunity afforded for an available for the correction of visiting Democrats is so inexhaustible that there should be a hope that each of them would profit by it to a more or less extent.

Unfortunately, however, the course pursued by the Democratic party in congress at the last session was such as to be incapable of adjustment with the conditions existing in the Philippines, so that the visiting statesmen will have either to arrange their political opinions or else to see things in the islands through Democratic glasses and hear them through Democratic trumpets.

Such a delegation might do considerable harm. They may continue to give the Filipinos the same wrong idea of American character and purposes that has been embodied in anti-expansion speeches and editorials and sent to the islands for circulation where they would do the most harm. They may also return nearer to give to American an utterly wrong idea of what is going on in the islands in order to justify their previous course and to furnish campaign material for the future.

It remains to be seen what will be the result in each individual case. Some of the visitors will undoubtedly change their opinions as a result of the trip and we hope for the best results regard to the others.

MR. BRYAN'S CANDIDATE

MR. BRYAN has selected the candidate that he would prefer to have the Republicans nominate in 1904 and it is Senator Hanna. It is easy to understand the reasoning by which Mr. Bryan has reached this conclusion. To many people Senator Hanna is nothing else than a political bogey man and one might fancy that Mr. Bryan himself had really begun to be imposed with the estimate of Populist editorials and Opper cartoons.

The Republican party has no intention of allowing Mr. Bryan to select its candidate and it has no intention of nominating Senator Hanna for the presidency. But incidentally be it remembered that Mr. Bryan, in picking out Senator Hanna as the weakest possible candidate is making another mistake. The great trouble with Hanna in the Democratic eye is that he has been too uniformly successful. If he had not shown his ability to organize and to manage national industries successfully it is presumable that he would not have aroused Democratic fire, if he had made a complete failure of his business affairs and had been obliged to take to politics to earn his living he might even have secured a fusion nomination to congress in a year. If he had not committed the unpardonable sin of winning two presidential campaigns by a rare display of executive and administrative ability he would not have been made the object of Demo-Populist abuse and some very clever cartoons.

If the people should ever have to take their choice between the senator from Ohio and the ex-congressman from Nebraska Mr. Bryan in all probability would experience the knowledge of how much worse it would feel to be beaten by Hanna than to be beaten by McKinley.

The next two weeks is the time when premature explosions of firework cause havoc. A little carelessness may amount to criminal negligence. Young America is entitled to the right of noisy demonstration on the Fourth but even to young Americans of right mindedness the testing of firecrackers before the dawn of Independence day itself is not only a violation of city ordinances but is an annoyance and aggravation as being inappropriate. Keep the crackers locked up until the daylight of the Fourth. If the small boy outwits locksmithy keep the small boy locked up.

The cartoonists should begin practicing on their lions. Roosevelt is going to Colorado Springs, says the Des Moines News.

But this time Roosevelt will be lion instead of lion hunter. This to avoid misapprehension.

Modern Methods of Dealing With Consumption

It is now generally established that consumption is a curable disease. Like every other chronic malady if it is permitted to assume its full of the system and complicate itself with other diseases it is beyond remedy. But taken in time and dealt with in its first stages recovery is practically assured. When the character of the germ became known it only remained to subject it to the conditions most favorable to its existence. Oxygen destroys it. Its dead least enemies are pure air and light. Hence a number of sanitaria have been established on the open plains and mountains of the west. And the most effective treatment is therefore that [illegible]

Hence hygienic and dietetic measures are of the highest importance. Whatever has been done thus far in medicine of high value in combating the disease. There are the great results come with patients are those allowed to a simple and nutritious diet given whose chief elements are fresh air and abundant nutrition under circumstances that also tend to exert the influence to the greatest possible extent. With the new methods it is no longer held necessary or even desirable to seek a climate of the kind that was supposed to possess some specific property against the disease. The benefits from mild climates are now seen to be due chiefly to the effects of the climate. Life that the climate encourages. It was after the advantages of such a climate they are able to be offset by the depressing influence of the separation from home and friends with consequent isolation. The expense to the great majority of patients also bars the way to such. Therefore the problem is how treatment in the whole is that which has been at home. This is the conclusion reached by the authorities of the most important works on pulmonary tuberculosis. Dr. S. A. Knopf of New York, who expresses his thoroughness of in the specific curability of any climate and the fact that place—[illegible] rich—were it would do the greatest good to the greatest number. He says that it is essential to the majority of tuberculous patients to be treated and cured in the same or nearly the same climate where they will have to live and work after their return to health.—From "The Winning War Against Consumption" by Sylvester Baxter, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

Pure Air as a Cure for Consumption

It is important that the outdoor time of the patient should be passed in pure air. The vigilance of this lines of campaign against the enemy should not be relaxed a moment. Therefore good air has to be provided for the time spent within doors. Otherwise the foe will take advantage of the absence. With the new focus thus recognized by him the advantages gained will be largely counteracted. Hence the rooms have not only to be kept scrupulously clean and disinfected but thoroughly ventilated. The patient has to sleep with his window open as wide as possible. In certain German sanitaria an infant patient is so housed upon that there are no windows in the one lung. An abundance of bedclothing is provided and the patient soon learns to sleep in comfort in the coldest weather even though the snow blows in. The excess of oxygen fairly burns the bacilli out of the system.

In an eastern Massachusetts region, not far from the coast and but slightly above the sea level, subject to all the vicissitudes of climate for which New England is famous and so peopled with consumption that one fourth of all the deaths in the commonwealth are caused by it, some remarkable results have been obtained by Dr. Charles S. Millet, of Brockton, in the home treatment of consumption. A young man, many of whose nearest relatives on both sides had died of the disease, was the first case. He was already in a bad way when a change of climate was advised and the prospect of leaving home so depressed him that he became much worse. His physician had been interested in the account of the German methods of keeping patients out in reclining chairs until 10 o'clock in the evening, but he considered a bed the best place at night. So the doctor consented to the patient's desire to keep at work—for he was employed in a factory and could not leave without a serious sacrifice—on condition that he slept outdoors. The young man [illegible] a chamber window, where there was a southwesterly exposure. Here he slept under the sky for five months. He began to gain flesh from the start. In four months his weight had increased by 22 pounds. Recovery was complete. The only medicine he took was a tonic of nux vomica. The same physician met with equal success with like treatment in various other cases. The ideal arrangement of a sanatorium would therefore seem to be one where the sleeping rooms with a southerly exposure are planned with windows so large that the whole space is commodiously free to the air on one side while without the [illegible] conveniences where the beds can be rolled out for sleeping out of the wards at all times when the weather permits.—From "The Winning War Against Consumption" by Sylvester Baxter, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

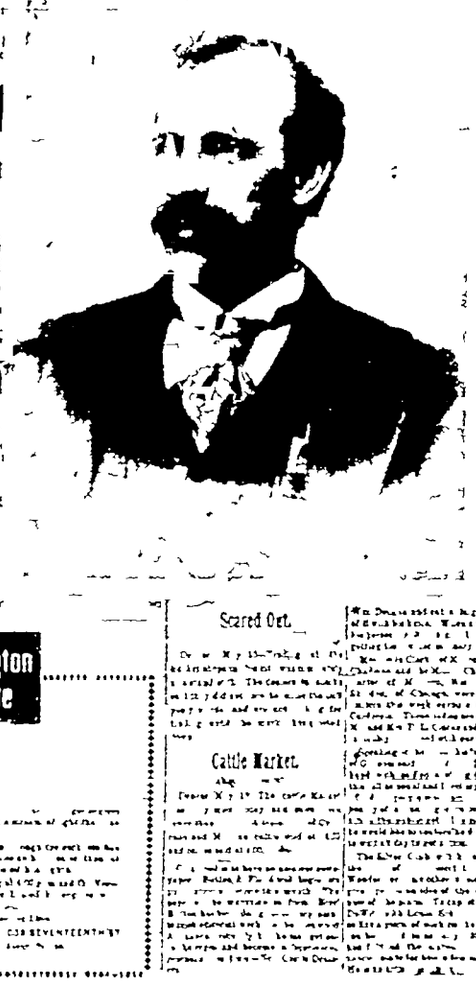
THE LEADING Sporting Resort Of The West



There is only one Glenwood Springs in the state and there is only one newspaper Avalanche. Whether this latter fact is regarded as an advantage or otherwise depends on the point of view. There are circumstances in which the cow if endowed with post mortem consciousness has a poor opinion of the locomotive and when it comes to a collision the avalanche is several degrees more than an irksome wheel horse.

Some years ago the Avalanche had as a sub title "In It Daily."

And it was.

Some people supposed that the subtitle referred to the big bathing pool and there was a picture of that phenomenon above the heading that corroborated that theory but there was more than one kind of hot water in Glenwood Springs in those days and the Avalanche was usually up and a going with whatever was in the swim.

But no town even in Colorado could be expected to keep up a Sheriff Kendall pace forever and the Avalanche some time ago decided to raise more sugar beets and less of what's the matter with Kansas.

H. A. Holmes who is it when the Avalanche transacts a place be that prize a wagon load of potatoes from an admiring subscriber or an invitation to a sleigh is one of the many sided men of the state. He kept the Avalanche at the [illegible] pitch that an avalanche could be kept in the days when rigidity was a necessary function of its environment and later in the more rippling times of irrigation he has accomplished a real benefit for his community that any of his contemporaries might be proud to equal though few of them could do so.

In fact it would be unfair to say that his record is one of consecutive periods. On the contrary he has kept things going in various directions according to circumstances ever since the paper started in May 1891 and it is still one of the miles of the office that you can get whatever you come after.

One of the first questions taken up by the Avalanche was the culture of sugar beets. The work was well done and the results successful in the highest degree. From 1891 to 1897 the Avalanche gave away $500 in premiums to farmers to induce them to raise sugar beets.

The editor went into the lecture field and covered the state of Colorado [illegible] there after which Secretary Wilson of the interior department at Washington D. C. promised him a ton of sugar beet seed to cover the state. With his load on his back he went to the chamber of commerce at Denver and asked for their assistance in the matter of getting the farmers of the state interested in the industry so that the sugar industry could become one of the realities which it is today.

The chamber paid the expenses of a lecture tour which he made all over the state in the winter and spring of 1897.

Mr. Holmes has been in the newspaper business 30 years. 10 years continuously in Glenwood Springs. At times I have seen some of it and know what it is to run a newspaper in a frontier town when a street slugging match is not an essential adjunct of a pointed editorial where a public wrong was attempted to be righted. I remain to look over the heads of some of the midnight assassins and plugugliosi who have attempted to bury my sel sons paste and brush six feet under ground.

There are a great many other "crimes" credited to the Daily Avalanche and Weekly Avalanche Echo among which must be mentioned the establishing of a strong farmers organization with an annual district fair. The work of making the first strawberry day for Glenwood a success fell almost wholly upon these two papers.

The Avalanche is always ready to take advantage of every opportunity for improvement and is generally recognized as one of those leading the smaller dailies of the state.

Telegraphing Without Wires.

There have been up to the present two difficulties which have stood in the way of the more universal application of wireless telegraphy. One was the impossibility of locating accurately the direction from which a message came. The other was the fact that if several messages were being sent at one time their effects would overlap and the signals received at any station would be a confused mixture. This first difficulty can be obviated to a certain extent by using suitable mirrors provided the other waves are not too long, and the second has been almost completely conquered by the ingenious work of Professor Slaby of Berlin using a method of resonance long since proposed by Professor Pupin of Columbia college, New York. Slaby has perfected his apparatus to such a degree that he can make an oscillator [illegible] a fixed number of vibration, and a receiver which will respond to waves of a definite period but to no others so that however many waves of what ever periods are passing over a receiver it will pay no heed to them unless they are of the proper period. It thus becomes possible to transmit messages free from the jarring influence of other ether waves produced by vibrations.

Naturally the field of usefulness of wireless telegraphy is limited. It can never compete with the long distance telephone or the rapid telegraph systems, but for maintaining communication between moving vessels and the land and across channels where cables are not safe it offers by far the most satisfactory solution of the obvious difficulties. It should be noted that some of the most important and successful modifications in wireless telegraph methods have been made in this country under the direction of the officers of the United States signal service.

The history of wireless telegraphy would not be complete without some mention of Joseph Henry, America's greatest scientist, for it was he who first, in 1842, discovered the oscillatory character of certain electric discharges and who showed that these oscillations produced disturbances which could by suitable receivers be detected at distances of many rods and through intervening buildings. He even arranged an apparatus on this principle to respond to the lightning discharges of distant storms. The great genius of Henry was never more apparent than in his investigation of electrical discharges and their oscillatory nature. It is a lasting testimony to the ignorance among Americans of the [illegible] that the name of Joseph Henry is not included in the fifty selected for the Hall of Fame of the nation.—(From "The Latest Triumphs of Electrical Invention" by Prof. Joseph S. Ames in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

The Buffalo Fair at Night.

The Panamerican memory which will linger longest is the night scene. Essentially an out-of-door fair, the electrical display surpasses [illegible]. All that art and ingenuity can do to heighten the effect has been done. As the half hour of the gloaming comes on the buildings will be deserted even in the midway, the splendid barker that

"Man that walks the pavements

[illegible] his post and takes his stand in the court of fountains. And then when the dusk has deepened a fairy [illegible] appears on the lamp posts—rosettes of electric bulbs—then in arches, ways and eaves and pinnacles, the panels of the domes are outlined in [illegible] gems as high up on the buildings begins to shine and the towers become [illegible]. The glow increases, star points sparkle from every building, the roofs and sides of the porticoes, the entrances are bedecked in incandescent fire, while the tower now fairly ablaze from base to top stands a radiant monument to that [illegible] force whose name I bear. Let the visitor behold the illumination from where he will—if through the arcadeway of the Stadium a massive screen the tower stands out as that of the fairy city of a weary caravan. If from the Midway road in the neighboring park it is as if Mustafa's son had rubbed his wonderful lamp and bid it be a fairy beautiful to behold. Whence it is seen the effect is the same. The memory of it deep and lasting. What matters it to recall the number of the hundreds of thousands of electric bulbs which are emulously aglow or to speculate on what the right scenes of the exposition will be when the electric fountains are really playing and the scores of hidden searchlights mingle the sparkling iridescence with the golden glow of these early days? The world has never seen a sight like this nor will it again until another Niagara shall elsewhere render decorative lighting cheap enough to warrant its at Buffalo. The attempt I am not successful in making the lights of night more seriously beautiful than are the lights of day.—From "The Panamerican Exposition Day" by William H. Hehaes in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

LITERARY TOPICS

BOOKS

"THE WILDERNESS ROAD."

A Romance of St. Clair's Defeat and Wayne's Victory. By Joseph A. Altsheler, author of "In Circling Camps," "A Herald of the West," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. D. Appleton & Company, New York.

Mr. Altsheler pictures the most thrilling scenes of the movement for expansion when at the end of the eighteenth century the men of Kentucky and the old frontier were pushing westward and northward to gain a wider territory. He sketches the division of an empire before it was won, the advance of untrained soldiers and their terrible fate in the wilderness, and the subsequent stirring campaign which secured the new country. His hero, a soldier with a romantic history, which keeps the reader in suspense, plays with St. Clair, a part not unlike that which Washington acted with Braddock. A fascination story of love and aspiration runs throughout the vivid scenes on the frontier and in the wilderness. The winning of the heroine by dauntless courage and self surrender forms a series of vivid and dramatic pictures which absorb the reader's interest throughout.

Of Mr. Altsheler the Vanderbilt University Quarterly, Nashville, Tenn., says:

"In 1897, a novel by an unknown writer appeared in a series published by Messrs. Appleton, under the caption of 'The Sun of Saratoga.' It attracted no little attention, yet few of Mr. Altsheler's classmates were aware that the author was the one they had known so well. This book was followed soon after by 'A Soldier of Manhattan,' the second of a series of most delightfully written novels dealing with the history of our country. These books have received generous commendation on the part of the critics and the reading public. As the New York Independent says concerning 'In Circling Camps:' We see no reason why Mr. Altsheler should not be cordially congratulated. He has written a romance of the civil war in which we feel a fresh and captivating genius.'

"Mr. Altsheler, like many other men who are doing exceptional work in the north and east is a southerner, and was born in southern Kentucky. His father was of German descent, as his name readily reveals, while his mother was English—not a bad mixture of blood for a writer. He was educated in the neighborhood schools, and finally entered Vanderbilt university in 1882. He remained here for a year, and was awarded the Latin scholarship for the next year, but did not return to claim it, going instead to Louisville to enter journalism in the service of the Evening Post of that city. He remained with this paper for a year, and then accepted a position with the Courier-Journal, with which he remained for seven years, serving as a reporter, legislative correspondent, dramatic critic, commercial editor, and editorial writer. In 1893 he was offered a position with the New York World, which he accepted, and has been associated with the same since that time. He has represented the World in varied capacities—was the representative at the World's Fair, in the Hawaiian islands, and elsewhere, and for the last five years has had charge of the tri-weekly edition.

"Mr. Altsheler has been writing fiction for a number of years, his first effort, 'The Sun of Saratoga,' being written as a boy's story of adventure for the World, which was in need of such a story, and, not being able to secure it, he sat down and wrote it himself. The success of this venture led him to try something else on a higher scale, and 'A Soldier of Manhattan' was the outcome, which has proved to be something more than a success d'estime. The following books succeeded, each one of which has received its full share of favorable appreciation: 'A Herald of the West,' 1896, 'The Last Rebel,' 1899, 'In Circling Camps,' 1900, and 'In Hostile Red,' 1900. Some of these have also been published in Great Britain and Australia, where they have been received with favor.

"Mr. Altsheler has made generous use of the wonderful store of romance contained in our national history, and has used it with tact and skill, and the praise which has been given him is but the legitimate reward coming to one who is a master in a fascinating but by no means easy field of literary effort.

"In addition to these novels, Mr. Altsheler has published short stories in nearly all the magazines, and now has on the press a long historical romance of early Kentucky and the old Northwest, to be called the 'Wilderness Road.'"

JULY MAGAZINES

The Smart Set.

The publishers of The Smart Set declare the July number of that magazine superior in many respects to all previous numbers.

The number begins with a novelette by Mollie Elliot Seawell, entitled "Papa Bouchard." Since "The Sprightly Romance of Marsac" Miss Seawell has written no such humorous and delightful story as this. It is really a French farce, and its dramatic possibilities are evident. M. Bouchard, a highly respectable advocate of Paris, rebels against the domestic tyranny of his spinster sister, and levants from his quiet home of thirty years to gay bachelor quarters, where he speedily finds diversion and excitement, and is precipitated into a maelstrom of ludicrous troubles. As between his ward, the pretty Leontine, and the timid young widow, Mme. Vernet, there is little of the strenuous life that he fails to experience.

Elizabeth Duer (Mrs. James G. King Duer) contributes an amusing story entitled "In Loco Parentis," descriptive of the adventures of a young society man who fathers an orphaned infant. Mrs. Sherwood writes of "Some English Princesses," most of whom she has known, and her reminiscences have a personal character that gives them verity and charm. Edgar Saltus entertainingly preaches the "Gospel of Gold," and Edgar Fawcett tells a strange story of duplicity and passion entitled "In a London Season." Julien Gordon (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger) has a little masterpiece of character study in "A Lost Line," and "According to Gibson" is a $100 prize story by Erin Graham. Other stories are "The Queen's Love," by Justus Miles Forman; "The Kisses of Arcady," by Richard Wilstedt; "Mrs. Maitland's Correspondent," by Jane Brevoort Eddy; "A Deuce Game," by Miriam Cruikshank; "The Error of Her Ways," by May Austin Low, and "Paquita, the Dancer," by Mrs. Maraquita Bahks.

The Literary Era.

Perhaps the most notable paper in the June number of The Literary Era is a contribution by Egerton Castle, author of "The Pride of Jennico," in which he gives some personal details and reflections bearing on his own work. Dr. John Foster Kirk, the historian, has a scholarly paper on "Conscious Illusion in Fiction." Robert Mackay one upon the "Poetry and Maxims of the Chinese," in which he prints some very interesting examples of Chinese poetry. John Habberton talks of "The World's Greatest Song Writer," Frederic M. Bird gives some amusing and instructive specimens of "Familiar Pautologies," and Helen Churchill Candee tells a new anecdote of the author of "David Harum," which she illustrates by quite an interesting portrait. Mr. Walsh's department, and the other sections of the magazine, are up to their usual standard of excellence and interest.

LITERARY NOTES

Mary Catherine Crowley, author of "A Daughter of New France," in recounting her literary experiences, says:

"For a time, fascinated by the variety and life of newspaper work, I thought of beginning at the foot of the journalistic ladder, but a prominent New York journalist advised against it. Journalism is like writing in the sands of the seashore, he said; 'to be sure, the sands are sometimes golden, but thereare many clever people toiling in newspaper offices in order to secure the leisure to devote to literature; if you have the time to write stories, make the most of it.'

"But sweet as are the successes, great or small, that come to the slave of the pen, the chief pleasure of his work is in the doing of it, even though the pleasure is also a labor. And so, I do not want so much to write stories as to write good stories; to make the characters as true to life, and to relate the incidents in as simple, clear, and forcible language as possible. Whatever inspiration I have I find in Michael Angelo's motto, 'Genius is infinite patience,' which George Eliot rendered, 'Genius is hard work.'"

Miss Crowley's new work, "A Daughter of New France," is in its fourth edition. It deals with Quebec in the time of Count Frontenac, and with the founding of Detroit by Cadillac, who is made the principal figure in the story.

The esoteric dramatist advanced that the essence of true drama lay in the stage directions, and that the drama of the future would consist mainly of interjections—provided with explanatory stage directions. He could not forbear to note the correspondence between the last three vowels and the three acts of the modern social, seventh commandment drama.

Act I. II. (Stage directions of at least 20 pages.)

Act II. Oh! (Stage directions of at least 20 pages.)

Act III. You! (Stage directions of at least 20 pages.)

The minor characters in Sidney McCall's "Truth Dexter" are especially natural and pleasing, among them old Colonel Dexter, "Convictions!" he cries, "What right had anybody to convictions when the south was in danger?"

"Truth Dexter," by Sidney McCall, figures among the six best-selling books in the June Bookman.

A "Sailor's Log," the autobiography of Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, has proved so popular that D. Appleton & Co., the publishers, announce the sixth edition—this within four weeks of the original publication.

Mrs. Ella W. Peattie, whose romance "The Beleaguered Forest," is to be published shortly, has had exceptional opportunities for acquiring a broad knowledge of American life. She was born in Michigan while her father was at the front as a soldier in the civil war. For several years she was a successful contributor to Chicago and Omaha newspapers, and traveled over the greater part of the United States. Her stories and sketches were accepted by nearly all the leading magazines, and she gained an exceptional reputation by her stories of Western life and western types. Her recently finished romance, "The Beleaguered Forest," has been described as a consistent study of a woman's inconsistency, sketched against the background furnished by the great pine forests of northern Michigan.

The forthcoming novel, "Mills of God," by a new writer, Elinor M. Lane, has offered an occasion for a charming co-operation by the author's artist friends in a wholly original scheme of illustration. The time of the romance is the late eighteenth century in Virginia and in London, and the illustrations are apparently contemporary portraits of the principal characters executed in varying mediums. There is a beautiful miniature portrait of Lady Grafton, the central figure, and a bas-relief of another character actually modled by H. H. Kitson, the well-known sculptor. A third character is presented in apparently an old portrait in oils, and a fourth in an old-time silhouette. The originals were persons carefully selected, and dressed in appropriate costumes by the author and her friends. The effect of this little gallery of eighteenth century portraits is described as peculiarly charming. "Mills of God" will be published in America and England about the middle of June. D. Appleton & Co., who have brought out so many successful new writers, will be the American publishers.

The fifteenth thousand of "Truth Dexter," by Sidney McCall, is ready.

Louise Chandler Moulton writes of "Truth Dexter:" "I don't know how to praise it enough. I can't recall any novel which has interested me so absorbingly for years. It is a matchless book."

A charming and powerful novel on Little, Brown & company's new list is "When the Gates Lift Up Their Heads; a Story of the Seventies," by Payne Erskine. The scene of the book is a little mountain town in the south. Negroes, whites, descendants of old southern families, northern visitors, are all vividly portrayed, and play their part in the dramatic development. The book is a love story, as well as a picture of the South after the war.

Regarding "The Master-Knot of Human Fate," Ellis Meredith writes to her publisher: "The idea is absolutely my own, and whatever else it may lack, it cannot be said that the plot is not striking and original. It is not a purpose novel, though it is a problem novel. Having a somewhat fantastic motif, I have tried to make the story as convincing as possible."

The success of Maud Wilder Goodwin's "White Aprons" and "The Head of a Hundred" is being repeated with her new story, "Sir Christopher," which is in its fifth edition.

Lafcadio Hearn, author of "Shadowings," "Exotics and Retrospectives," "In Ghostly Japan," etc., has been made an honorary member of the London Japan society.

The "Sir Christopher" poster, from a painting by Edwin H. Blashfield, pictures the incident in which Sir Christopher Neville takes oath of tenant before the boy Cecil Calvert. The picture is nearly described by this passage from the book: "On the dais stood Cecil, his eyes dancing under the page-cut hair, which fell like a thatch over his forehead, and his curls tremulous with the excitement, which would not let him be still for an instant. Elinor stood beside him, . . . and on the step knelt Neville."

"Ballantyne," Helen Campbell's new novel, is already in its second edition, as is also Ellis Meredith's story, "The Master-Knot of Human Fate."

"Pendleton Morris," in Helen Campbell's novel, "Ballantyne," has been pronounced "one of the most notable characters in modern fiction." Morris is a woman—superbly made of matchless intellect, and thoroughly educated—who plays, and has played for years, the role of a man. The character is one of the surprises of the book.

The ideal head reproduced on the "Truth Dexter" poster is from an original painting by Jessie Wilcox Smith.

Max O'Rell writes from London that "The Seal of Silence," by A. R. Conder is the new English success. He says that the author had a genuine gift for comedy and achieved "an astounding success" in reconciling the reader to the marvelous. "The Seal of Silence" is the first and last novel of the author. This remarkable romance will be introduced to the American public by D. Appleton & company.

Adams' Commercial Geography, one of the most important books of the season, will be issued early in July. The great interest in commercial education, and all that concerns the industrial growth of the United States, makes this book a most timely one. While it treats the subject upon an educational basis, it will be a book of much value to the business man, the manufacturer, the farmer—in fact, to all engaged in commerce and industry in any of their innumerable forms. It is necessarily limited to the dominating features that are important to the general reader as well as to the student. It shows especially the effects and the conditions that result from certain causes and natural laws. It avoids an excessive use of statistical information, but presents enough to elucidate the main principle of commercial geography. Each product is treated under the country where the manufacture of the commodity is especially prominent. In this way tedious study of comparative tabulated matter is avoided. A distinctive feature of the book is its new maps and diagrams (over 160 in number), that illustrate all the important phases of commerce in its relation to the physical features of the various portions of the earth's surface. The volume is further embellished by a considerable number of full page, half-tone illustrations representing prominent industrial occupations and products. D. Appleton & Co.

The celebration of the King Alfred Millennial prompts an illuminating estimate of the great West Saxon king, in the July Atlantic, by Louis Dyer.

A curious parallel to some modern economic conditions is portrayed in a most readable paper in the July Atlantic on "Sixteenth Century Trusts," by A. P. Winston.

"Aspects of the Panamerican Exposition" are vividly depicted in the July Atlantic by Eugene Richard White, who does full justice both to the physical features and the social significance of the exposition.

In an able and sympathetic paper on New Orleans, in the Atlantic for July, Albert C. Phelps of that city traces not only the picturesque characteristics of the Louisiana capital, but shows the part it played in the reconstruction drama.

"Cardinal Virtues," in the July Atlantic is a direct breezy discussion of practical ethics, by President William DeWitt Hyde of Bowdoin.

In the July Atlantic, P. A. Sillard writes of that perennially fascinating subject, the secret of James Boswell's success as a biographer; and Kate Stephens touches on an even more interesting—though far more hazardous—topic in discussing the characteristics of "The New England Woman."

The July Atlantic contains a very notable group of out-door poems by John Burroughs, Duncan Campbell Scott, Meredith Nicholson, L. S. Porter, Richard Burton, Arthur Ketchum, Wilfred Campbell and Joseph Russell Taylor. Several stories also emphasize the "return to nature" which more and more characterizes the American people in the summer time.

In discusing the demand made by the powers for an indemnity from China, the New York Sun cites Gen. J. H. Wilson's "China" editorially as the book "which unquestionably gives the latest trustworthy account of the fiscal condition of the middle kingdom." It is interesting to notice the constant evidences of the freshness and reliability of the new edition of General Wilson's "China" as shown by the frequent references to the book in current discussions.

"Tolstoi's Successor."

A cablegram reached the Scribners the other day from Nizhni-Novgorod in eastern Russia, signed "Gorky" and containing the single word "Accepted." This means the introduction to America of a Russian novelist who one year and a half ago was unknown to any except his personal friends, but whose appearance now at the opera or other public gatherings in Moscow is the signal for a vociferous public ovation.

In his native land he is hailed as the successor of Tolstoi and in France his stories are read in translation from sea to boundary line. And all this within little more than a year.

The young man who has so quickly solved the problem of success is Maxim Gorky. The novel which Isabel Florence Hapgood is translating is entitled "Foma Gordyeeff; it is the most distinguished of the stories he has had time to publish within his brief period of fame; it has made him his reputation both in Russia and France.

When Prince Krapotkin was over here this spring he told a New York Tribune reporter all about young Gorky, who doesn't know how to take the praise that is pressed upon him. He is embarrassed by his popularity. Once when the audience at the theatre stood up and cheered his entrance into a box, he got angry for he felt that this was too much.

"I'm not a ballet-dancer or a Venus of Milo," he shouted getting red in the face. "What are you staring at me for? Keep your eyes on the stage."

Everybody laughed and cheered the louder and poor Gorky was much confused over his outbreak and the failure of it.

Gorky's father was an upholsterer and died when the boy was five years old. The young author is about thirty-two now, by the way. He was hired out in a shoe shop, ran away, apprenticed to a draughtsman, ran away, put at the making of wooden saints, hired out as cook's boy on a steamer and then made gardener's assistant. He also peddled apples, worked on a dock, sawed wood and acted as porter. Then he went to Tzaritzyn and was watchman on a railroad. He tried to go into the army but they refused to accept a tramp.

He sold beer for a while, then was hired by a lawyer, but tramped off to Tiflis where he worked in a railroad shop and published his first novel in a local paper. Then he wandered back to the Volga, and at Nizhni-Novgorod lived by selling sketches to the newspapers. In this way he met the writer Vladimer Korolenko, one of the most brilliant men of Russian letters, and developed very rapidly under his guiding hand. He attracted no attention until he so suddenly sprang into prominence.

The favorite author with Young Russia, writes Christian Brinton in the Critic, is Maxim Gorky, ex-banker's apprentice and tramp, who in his wanderings over the face of Russia has seen and has remembered. The Mjestyanin is his hero, the itinerant shoemaker or tinsmith, the Cossacky or barefooted. Gorky's pages are full of bitter protest and passionate lyricism.

Surely Tolstoi's successor, if he really proves to be what Russia now proclaims him, is one of the most romantic figures in the Republic of Letters.

The Traveling Man and the Reporter.

The Traveling Man had just told the "cabby" the destination, and given him suggestions on fast driving, when a soft-hatted youth with a note-book rushed up to him.

"I'm from the News, senator. Won't you give me in a word what you think about the state election?"

The traveling man unconsciously grew dignified as he smiled at the reporter.

"I should like you better, my boy, if you would call me by name," he said.

"I beg your pardon, Senator I was in a hurry."

"Yes, and you're young. That will save you. Here is my card, and I want you to understand, young man, that I am a respectable traveling man. Then he added, as he saw the boy's consternation: 'If you really want my views of the Ohio election, I'll write them for you after I get to New York. But you won't print them.'"—(Arthur Goodrich, in The World's Work.

She wore a gown of white chiffon veiled in the traditional bridal tulle. Rev. Thomas H. Malone came from New York to perform the ceremony which was witnessed by the relatives and a few intimate friends of the two families.

Many tall tropical plants settinched the hallway and the drawing room was festooned with smilax [illegible] at intervals with clusters of pink and white peonies tied with pink ribbons.

Corners and archways afforded space for palms and dracenas. Mantels and fireplaces in each apartment were [illegible] pink and white peonies.

In the front parlor the large double window was curtained with smilax and white roses and an artistic archway beautifully entwined with smilax and white roses formed a bower beneath which the handsome young pair plighted the mutual vows.

Miss Ilma Walbrach and Edna Meyer rendered the wedding march from Lohengrin arranged for violin and piano as the bride descended the stairway with her father.

Heavy duchess satin of an ivory white was used in the fabrication of the rather plain yet exceedingly rich and dainty wedding gown. Like Another Helen

By George Horton

Few books of fiction in recent years have come so quickly into public notice, and have received such universal commendation as "Like Another Helen," the new story by George Horton. It has been called "A Perfect Novel." The June "Bookman" announces it as one of the four most popular books of the month. Price, $1.50.

"The Crisis"

By Winston Churchill, published a little over three weeks ago, is already in its one hundred and sixtieth thousand a greater sale than "Richard Carvel" or "David Harum" enjoyed in the same time. Up to the present time we have heard not one single adverse criticism. They say it is as good or better than "Richard Carvel." Price, $1.50.

"The Visits of Elizabeth."

The brightest book of the day in fiction is "The Visits of Elizabeth," by Elinor Glyn the second most popular book in the United States last month. It is something different. Price, $1.50.

"The Puppet Crown"

By Harold McGrath, we believe will be "the 'hit' in new fiction." One large eastern dealer says: "The sale here has been remarkable it far exceeds that of "David Harum" within the same length of time after publication." "Fine and brilliant as sun shine." "As crisp and clean-cut as a new mintage." "A romance that takes all one's adjectives to tell about." It is a story after the style of "The Prisoner of Zenda" even more thrilling a book that one can read all night. Price, $1.50.

New York Society

In the autumn of 1893 a small book called "The Last A Visiting and Shopping Guide" modestly bound in blue cloth was put on sale in a few book stores. It was as it purported a visiting list. I have a copy of it before me. It is a strange reminder of society as it was 7 years ago. The young man who compiled it borrowed the visiting lists of Mrs. William Astor and Mrs. August Belmont, and of one or two others and from these and his own knowledge of people he compiled it. It was the first printed [illegible] Today hundreds of persons [illegible] have been deserted.

The richest of the fashionable leaders have by silent agreement resolved to keep up the street social prestige of Fifth avenue from Fifty-first street to [illegible] in houses in the immediate vicinity of Central park. At the present time Fifth street runs along brown stone wall proud at certain points by entrances to the park and west Fifty-second street is gay in the green leaves of trees and sweet shrubbery. The wall is two and a half miles long. The palaces built in the east side of the avenue face the park. Opposite the mansions [illegible] Fifty-fifth and Sixty-fifth streets on the corner of Sixty-fifth street stands a square building, [illegible] Madison avenue. It is called the Metropolitan club. It [illegible] the grandest palace in the town. Called Mills [illegible].

The stately residence [illegible] The first on the left [illegible] Fifty-second street is that of Cornelius Vanderbilt, the richest man in the country. His fortune is [illegible] at his disposal. His grandfather was the founder of the Vanderbilt family. He was a poor man and his wife was a Hodgson. He [illegible] and aggressive. He was a powerful man, a leader of men, a sportsman and a yachtsman. The Metropolitan club occupies the corner of the avenue and Sixty-fifth street. The old mansion of Mrs. William Astor, the queen of fashionable society, is [illegible].

Think of it.

Such evidences of wealth challenge the attention of men. Such [illegible] not be ignored. Then fashions become important. In fact they are the outward and visible signs of plutocracy.

Aristocracy is found upon wealth and breeding. It says heed to the claims of long descent.

Plutocracy is found upon [illegible] wealth. It arms the showy with the golden rod to state power opposition.

Plutocracy may reign today, but time assesses marriages [illegible] will do all that is necessary, and a [illegible] aristocracy will reign supreme.

I cannot help comparing "The List for 1893" with the "Social Register of 1901" and wonder what twenty years will bring forth. It is a marvelous age, and the old [illegible] plutocratic society is [illegible] the least conspicuous devices.

MR. DOOLEY ON THE YACHT RACES.

By F. P. DUNNE

Copyrighted 1901 by Robert Howard Russell

'In th' ol' times whin I was a yachtsman' began Mr Dooley

'Scowman, said Mr. Henne-sy

'Yachtsman,' said Mr Dooley 'Whin I was a yachtsman all a man needed to race was a flat bottomed boat an' a jibb an' a long drink. In thim days twas up with th' mainsail an' out with th' jib an' Cap'n Jawn first to th' Lake View pimpin' station f' th' segars. Now 'tis Hoe f' a yacht race. I have us go an' see our lawyers. 'Tis 'Haul away on th' writ' is no exact' an' let go th' pea-cyclam.' This Hoe all hang to th' Supreme Cboort. 'Tis 'Life on th' lowlin' locket an' a home on th' rowlin' calendar.' Befur we die Sir Lipton will come over here f' th' cup again an' we'll date him be gettin out an' overnight injuncsh'n. Mr. Carnegie is liable to tip an' spill us all into th' wet. Turn th' matt'r over to th' firm iv Wiggins, Schultz, O'Mally, Eckstein, Worcipski, Billoff, Gomez, Olson an' McPherson, an' let us have th' law on him.

I don't suppose Hennissy I ought to be settin' up me little jokes on a serious matther like this. What's it all about, Jaysus? Well, we see, 'tis this way. Wanst before th' war some lad from this country took a boat across th' Atlantic an' raced it again an' English boat an' iv course he won not. In' th' end th' lock an' they give him a cup. I don't know why they give him a cup but they give him a cup. He brought it back hor an' handed it to a yacht club which is an assocyation. Hennissy iv mimbers iv th' bar. He says 'We keep that cup on ye'r mantle-piece an' if ever an' Englishman wants it don't give it to him.' After awhile an' Englishman that owned a boat come atther th' cup an' 'twas Jaysus altogether an' th' lad' mad to th' line knows what he is. He's an' Irish man is coorse. That was all right too. But th' time com' whin th' lad' profs'lon took a hand in th' game. 'Look here,' says they, 'Ye've sailed nearly all th' statu' iv th' state iv New Jersey already, they says, an' if ye ain't careful ye'll be hauled up f' contimpt iv coort,' they says. So they took th' matther in hand an' drew up th' r'right papers. 'State iv New York, county iv Cook, ss—Know all men be these pr'sents. To all magisthrates an' polis officers greetin. In re Sir Lipton against the Cup. Ordered that if Sir Lipton shall secure the cup f' a cert' (which I won't) th' [illegible] as follows. Wun hundhered an' twinty cheet, fifty-four waist, hi' an' side pockets, carryin' thr' hundhered an' sixty-three thousan' cubic feet iv canvas, th' lacement iv th' boat to be paycked in green-wh'ch-yell'w flag, and to be open plumbin, steam heat throughout th' tirant to pay f' all repairs. Pe means iv this infernal machine if onable to kill off th' rile family he will attimp to cross th' stormy Atlantic an' if he ful will arrive at th' finishing line iv th' party of th' first part, said John Doe. Wanst th' re he will consult with mimbers iv th' New York Bar Assocyation who will lead him to a firm iv corp'ration expert counsel, who will give him his thr' which is two rinsit' reasir' like th' invar' ratio iv th' distance f'm th' binnacle to th' cookstove an' f'm th' coal stove to th' north to th' lowerpsit. He will then take his foolish' hat from th' hay an' if he keeps his hith he can return to th' sweet' bosiness f' a jolly good fellow which nobj'dy can deny.'

'Ye can see f' yiself, Hennissy, that yachtin' has become wan iv th' fine' pr'fess'ons. 'Tis that th' sport th' lead f'm Bo'ton into it. They's a Jolly Jack Tar f' ye. In dhrawin' up th' lease co'rt'min a'dont no more gallant sailor sides th' waves th' in th' Jack Tarsey iv th' Amalgamated Cup Yacht club. What he says he. If we're goin' to have a race he says, shiver me tim'rs if I don't hoist up th' lay, he says. So he become a sy'ndsman. But sinc' th' New York bar, thim that has th' cup on th' mantlepiece, ye can race only on two [illegible] they says. I'm [illegible] th' flat bottom ye'll me' a' runnin' iv our club. With th' ins'ance, says he. 'Ye can't,' says they. 'An' lavin' com' [illegible] with this insurance, ye must give us ye'r boat,' says they. 'We'll take it,' they says. 'If 'twas suit me entirely,' says Cap'n Tarson, 'I'm a simple sailor man an' I'd give ye the boat under th' following conditions,' he says. 'First, that ye'll take it to sea, that ye'll paint me name on th' lee iv it in red letters three feet high, th'rd, that ye'll ignore me to th' Prince iv Wales, fourth th' tell Sir Lipton yiself. Nawthin' he says will give me greater pleasure than to have me hand in me' an' spin iv a yarn th' lad' iv a wh' I was considher it an' hon'r to know,' he say. 'An' so he says, I'll cry ye to sign a bond an' give a sthrong security, say about five hundhert thousan' dollar.' In me hands in case anny paint shd be knocked off me boat,' he says. 'Yachtin' is a gintleman's sport,' he says, 'an' in dealin' with gintlemen, he says, ye can't be too careful,' he says.

'What's Sir Lipton doin' all this time?' asked Mr Hennessy.

He's prepar'n his bond, makin' his will an' goin' through th' other legal preliminaries iv th' race. He's built a boat too. An' King iv Englan' was aboard f' her, an' he was near killed be lavin' a mast f' co'plin. 'Th' Lord knows how he escaped.' A mass iv steel weighin' a hundhert thousan' ton fell on his Majesty an' knocked off. Sir Lipton felt pretty bad about it. He didn't mind losin' a mast or two but he didn't want anny'n' wan to know he had th' King aboard. Twud hurt business. 'Boys,' says he to th' rayporthers, 'th' King is on me yacht. Dhe hear me? The King's on me yacht. But don't say anything about it. I don't want to have it known. Don't print it onless ye have to, an' if ye print it in an' f' con picture's place it' th' first page.' He's here sure enough, boys. Th' mast just fell on his Majesty. It near kill'd him. I'm not sure it didn't kill him. He re'm'd perfectly cool throughout. So cut I. I was almost cold. So did I both iv us. But mind ye, not a word iv this in th' papers. I don't know how th' rayporthers got hold iv it. But they're a-prayin' lot.'

'How did th' mast come to fall?' ask'd Mr Hennessy eagerly. 'Dhe suppose Sir Lipton I mean iv us?'

'Sh,' said Mr Dooley, adding softly, 'He was born in Limerick.'

WARS BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOR

By E. M. Knox.

(Copyright 1901 Cosmographic Company.)

How can conflicts between employers and employes be prevented? Is the problem insoluble? To admit that it is would be a practical acknowledgment that self government is a failure which is of course untrue. That is clearly proven by the splendid achievements which have marked the century and a quarter of our national existence. In that comparatively short period we have become in almost every line of endeavor the most powerful commonwealth in the world and at the beginning of the new century we are [illegible] only begun. The contemplation of what the United States will be before the century comes to a close dazzles the imagination. Not only shall we then be in the leadership of all the people of the earth but the distance between the republic and the nation that shall be second will be so great as to border on the marvelous.

This magnificent development is being constantly retarded not to say imperiled by the warfare which in one part of the country or another, is being constantly waged between those that buy labor and those that sell it. Many of the state legislatures by the enactment of laws creating boards of arbitration to which all disputes should be referred, have endeavored to do away with this very often wanton destruction of the productive forces, but these tribunals have utterly failed to accomplish the purpose for which they were intended. The employers of labor as a rule, refuse to recognize them and in most cases, they have not the confidence of the workingmen. Again being without the power to enforce their decisions whatever they may be they are utterly ineffective from every point of view and in the interest of public economy should be abolished. Machinery that will not do the work for which it was intended is useless.

In the new era upon which we have entered of gigantic concentration of various departments of business in the hands of comparatively a few men the struggles between capital and labor must necessarily assume proportions as vast and consequences so far reaching that the public welfare if not the public safety will demand that laws be framed which shall make them impossible of not of occurrence of at least undue continuance. Never of course can there be a statute to make a man work that does not want to do so or on the other hand a statute compelling a capitalist to make his money active if he sees fit to keep it idle. But when a dispute between a powerful corporation which is the creature of the state and its employes assumes such virulent forms that it becomes a detriment and a menace to the community at large there must assuredly be lodged in the state that is the people the power of regulation that is self protection. When a corporation big or little refuses to listen to the grievances real or imaginary, of its men while it may be acting within its legal rights as they are now defined the safety of all clearly demands that those rights shall be restricted to such an extent that no part of the body politic will be injured.

How this desirable yet essential object is to be secured is a task that wise and patriotic statesmanship should set before itself. Perhaps a federal law may be necessary. Then let there be such a law. That may involve an amendment to the constitution. Then amend it. When 100,000 men or even 10,000 men respectfully state that they have grievances which they should like to have taken into consideration it should not be in the power of any president or board of directors insolently to decline to do so and fall back on the military force of the state to uphold him in all that he sees fit to do. This is not the true American way of doing business.

FIRST OF ALL WRITTEN CONSTITUTIONS

By John P. Foley

(Copyright 1901 Cosmographic Company.)

A convention to revise the constitution of Virginia is now in session at Richmond. The avowed objects for which it has been assembled together with its sensational initial proceeding respecting the oath of allegiance to the United States I do not propose to discuss. My object is simply to recall the interesting historical fact that the mother of presidents led the world in the adoption of written constitutions. Thomas Jefferson writing on the subject in 1824 two years before his death said: 'Virginia was not only the first of the American states but the first nation in the world at least within the records of history which peaceably by its wise men formed in free deliberation a constitution of government for itself and deposited it in writing among their archives always ready and open to the appeal of every citizen.'

Jefferson was not a member of the body that framed this first of all organic laws. He was at the time a member of the continental congress at Philadelphia. So deeply however was he interested in the great work in progress in his native state that he drafted a skeleton constitution and sent it to a friend in the convention. It arrived too late to be of any practical value, all the main provisions having been agreed upon before the receipt of the document. But Jefferson's labor was not all lost, for the convention adopted the magnificent preamble of the Jefferson constitution, prefacing it with the instrument that had been agreed upon. This preamble and the Declaration of Independence are strikingly similar in thought, tone and expression. Indeed it was charged at one time by the enemies of Jefferson that he had plagiarized the Declaration from the preamble. Jefferson set that accusation at rest in 1825 as follows: 'The Virginia constitution, with the preamble was passed on the 29th of June 1776, and the committee of congress had only the day before that reported to that body the draught of the Declaration of Independence.' The fact is that that preamble was prior in composition to the Declaration, and both having the same object of justifying our separation from Great Britain they used necessarily the same materials of justification and hence their similitude.

This first constitution formed a model framework of government for all the other states. The deliberations upon it attracted in that early day the most earnest attention for in all the colonies there was a wide divergence of opinion as to what form the new governments should assume. The conflict was between aristocracy and conservatism on one hand and democracy and radicalism on the other. In Virginia the lines between the two parties were sharply drawn and the issue was long in doubt. Two exceedingly well written anonymous pamphlets were put in circulation about the time the convention met. One of them, advocating the aristocratic theories of administration was signed 'A Native of the County.' The other which was entitled 'Thoughts on Government' was soon traced to the pen of John Adams. It presented in a masterly and convincing way the advantages of constitutions based on what was then considered the Democratic model but which would be scornfully rejected as Democracy at the present time. One of its leading provisions was the election of a lower house by the people which body was to elect an upper one limited in number and invested with a negative on the action of the inferior organization which had created it. This was radicalism in 1776. Adams in writing to Patrick Henry on the subject of the Virginia convention said: 'The dons, the lashaws, the grandees, the patricians, the sachems, the nabobs, call them by what name you please, sigh and groan, fret and sometimes stamp and foam and curse but all in vain. The democrat goes forward and cannot be recalled. That a more equal liberty than has prevailed in other parts of the earth must be established in America.'

In the constitution as adopted the Democratic party won a complete triumph. The two houses of the legislature were made elective by the people and both bodies jointly were entrusted with the election of the governor, the theory being that it would not be safe to give that power to the people direct. Jefferson was exceedingly dissatisfied with this first of constitutions and constantly urged its amendment. The basis of it he maintained was in opposition to the principle of equal political rights, referring to all but freeholders as part of the people, and therefore of a base element.

THE NEW REFORM IS BETTER FOOD

The Daily Bill of Fare Tested by Chemical Analysis—Good Cooking Still the Most Important Factor However—Experiments of a Boston Woman in Sanitary Science

Boston, June 22, 1901.—Several of the largest hospitals and public institutions in the country have recently undertaken to regulate their daily bill of fare in accordance with the advice of experts in sanitary chemistry. The results have been so good that the beginning of a food reform movement on somewhat new lines is predicted by those who hope for the success of the most thoughtful consideration.

Although it is not surprising that a woman should be largely responsible for laying the foundations for the expected reform the fact that she should have begun her special work in the laboratory rather than in the kitchen may perhaps give added interest to her success. Many women in all ages have shown ingenuity in preparing food so that it should delight the palate and the eye but singularly enough Mrs Ellen H. Richards who has charge of the laboratory of sanitary chemistry at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has attacked the food problem on the more practical grounds of public economy and public well being. A chemist rather than a cateress, she has sought the broad scientific principles upon which the economic sustenance of the human race depends and has acquired the authority that always results sooner or later from exact knowledge.

Over 100 years ago Count Rumford the prophet of good cooking and an early patron of exact technical study, said that the use of science is to explain the operations which take place in the practice of the arts and to discover the means of improving them and there is no process however simple it may appear to be that does not afford an ample field for curious and interesting investigation.' And yet the same Count Rumford recognized that the proposal of anything at once new and important commonly carries with it something offensive to most people, a fact which makes a real improvement in a vital matter a good deal of a trivial novelty.

It is natural therefore that actual food reform and dietary progress should lag far behind the scientific determinations of what a man must eat in order to live as well and as economically as possible. By the creed of most men the best food is that which their mothers used to cook and the selection of a diet that would enable them to do their work most easily, to preserve their health and prolong their lives has usually seemed a matter of remote importance.

At the training table however, the college athlete learns that discrimination in the matter of food means an immense gain in physical strength and endurance distinctly worth while when there is a special object in view. In much the same way that the college coach has been led to demand the training table, the physician has come to demand for hospital patients such food as will give them the best chance of recovery. In both cases something definite is expected from the human machine and the incidental cost is a secondary consideration. But in the selection of a dietary or bill of fare for prisons almshouses and other public institutions where the aim which may be expended for food is limited in advance it becomes necessary to choose such food stuffs as will furnish the greatest amount of nutriment for the least amount of money. It is a case where the cost of food must be kept down to a few cents for each meal that the exact comparison of food values becomes most important and the wastefulness of the ordinary manner of living becomes by contrast most apparent.

Sanitary chemistry establishes all these facts and in the increasing struggle for existence the fittest who would survive take advantage of them. Exhaustive experiments have shown that certain varying but definite amounts of nitrogenous substances, of fats and carbohydrates are required daily for children for students and for manual laborers. Chemical analysis has shown the proportions of these necessary substances in a thousand varieties of food stuffs and therefore the question of economy [illegible] mathematical precision. With the proper tables at hand it is not more difficult to acquire a working knowledge of food values than it is to learn whist or golf and any man upon entering a restaurant should be able to make up a suitable menu on scientific principles within the allowance.

In the application of the rules of sanitary chemistry however it becomes necessary to know whether the food materials that are offered are of standard quality. Pure milk for example has a certain definite value but milk diluted with water, colored with coal tar products and preserved with borax or formaldehyde is quite a different matter. No sooner therefore has the sanitary chemist established dietary laws than he must in his own justification expose the adulteration and misrepresentation of sophistication as it is called of the materials which he has recommended. While adulterations as for example the adulteration of milk may be dangerous to health and even life itself and while they may lower the effective value of the food they do not as the experiments of Mrs Richards here in Boston have shown appear frequently enough to impair seriously the public health. A greater danger Mrs Richards says lies in certain foods advertised as having already been partly digested by some artificial means and in different preparations which are claimed to have certain food values which in fact they do not possess. These foods being easily soluble enter quickly into the circulation—producing an effect of fullness and satisfaction so that some nutritious food is declined as unnecessary. The material result is that when the temporary benefit of such food wears off a young person particularly becomes faint from lack of real nourishment seeks relief in sweets or alcohol and suffers a corresponding loss of digestive power.

Then too there are dangers from the decomposition of food always to be guarded against. The saving for food out of season results in the use of injurious preservatives while the keeping of fresh food for shipment to a distance increases, according to Mrs Richards the danger of transmission of disease. Constant tests of milk and butter are consequently necessary for determining the presence of the bacilli of various diseases. The local supply of a large city also requires supervision since besides the constant danger that it may be locally made it may readily become a carrier of contagion. Then again the quality of cereals may vary greatly, especially in the nitrogenous substance they contain, the difference in oats and consequently in oatmeal being sometimes in the proportion of three to one.

But after all the food experts finally say, where with the assistance of sanitary chemistry, a suitable bill of fare has been selected and the materials have been analyzed and found to be pure, wholesome and economical the food might as well be thrown away if it is not properly prepared. It is that unless the food is attractive to the palate—a fact realized quite as definitely by the scientist as by the chef of a big hotel—it will not be eaten so that the student of sanitary chemistry in order to set in motion a really practical reform must learn the principles of good cookery and see to it constantly that they are effectively applied.

Very good work in this direction has been done by the kitchen of the Wells fair dwelling which is practically up to date in its methods and arrangements as well known. Earlier kitchens which were started in Boston and have since spread to other cities in the club dining rooms of the scientifically prepared attractively and sold at a small profit. All this has owed much to Mrs Richards' work and her advice to the public depending very largely on the constant employes of fools in the laboratories of the institute.

The chemical analysis of air has not yet reached such a well known infinitesimal ventilation. The chemical analysis of water has not [illegible] but the purest supply is intolerable in an overlightened community but it yet remains for the chemical analysis of food to create a sponsor for [illegible] of materials more efficiently applied which shall have a greater effect on the public health and well being than even purer water or better ventilation. In many ways the Institute of Technology has led both in the matter of improved sanitary and improved water supply as for example in the work of its instructors for better air for public halls in such experiments as those at the ventilation beds in Lawrence, Mass. and the fact that its new system will work even on so big a subject as [illegible] kind's daily food is not without certain suggestiveness as to future developments in the new sanitary reform.

Effects of Recent Oil Discoveries on the Refining Industry.

A question which must interest the general public as much as all of this year's activity in oil prospecting upon the fortunes of the oil refining industry. In considering this we must remember the enormous amount of enterprise which has been necessary to bring about the present condition of refining in the United States. The problem of producing a barrel of oil under our known conditions in Pennsylvania and West Virginia with profit at from 50 cents to 75 cents per barrel, coupled with great profit when this oil can be refined free of charge this oil in a pipe line from regular the daily supply from the wells of transporting it over all kinds of country to the seaboard refining it and delivering it to the retail grocery, to be sold there at retail at less than 10 cents a gallon and for less than 10 when sold by the barrel, this is indeed a problem which would not have been solved before all our oil had been wasted had it not been for an accident of combination of unusual business skill on in the early days of our oil industry. The various steps which have resulted in the present control of the oil refining interests of the world are fairly familiar to the public. In considering how these refining interests may be affected if a considerable addition is made to the supply of crude petroleum in Texas we must remember that the actual sudden additions of crude petroleum which have been furnished by the discoveries in West Virginia have been far greater in magnitude than all of these speculative finds in other parts of the United States. The result has been without effect upon the oil industry. The price of crude petroleum has fluctuated simply in accordance with the accumulation or exhaustion of stocks. Until the new conditions of crude petroleum present a formidable aspect in regard to stocks of oil for which the refining trust has been solved the price of other crude petroleums or of the refined products will not vary or will their prospects materially affect another phase of the refining industry. The more important effect of these new discoveries will undoubtedly be to divert the attention of those who control the refining interests of the world from the Old World and its alluring fields in Roumania, Galicia and elsewhere again to our own country—there is The New Oil Fields of the United States by David T. Day in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

'Interviewing Root'

Newspaper writers who know Secretary Root 'hate' to be interviewing him. One of the fraternity describes of a New York daily said:

'Interview Root? That is very easily said, but it is almost impossible to do it. I have tried a dozen times and every time he interviewed me without my knowing it.'

Once he overheard a Washington politician ask Root to some street fraud in Cuba and not. His statement was promptly contradicted by a friend and he turned to the secretary and said: 'It may have been only a brawl but I knew that where there is smoke there is a fire.'

The secretary looked up quickly and remarked:

'Which one I supposed to be the case with your Havana.'

When Root met out of the New York office some one asked Mr Root: 'Why is it that although all good New Englanders are said to go to Paris when in reality they go to New York?'

The secretary thoughtfully responded: 'I presume they go to Paris to live but to New York to live.'—(From Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for June.

Two little girls were playing near me a few days ago and I noticed that one of them was addressing to excceedingly long words for a child of her years. She did not seem thoroughly conversant herself with many of the terms she used but what attracted my attention too it in particular was her asking the other little girl the following question.

'Don't you think Bessie is dictatorial?'

'What did you say?' asked the other.

'I said don't you think Bessie is dictatorial?'

'Do you?'

'Yes.'

'Well I don't care anyway. I don't think so. Bessie is my friend.'

I do not often mention any papers in these but this little story would not be complete without telling who it was. It was Rog. He went away Tuesday night to spend the summer with his mother in Illinois. He is such a good friend to everyone that it is always a source of pain to have him go away. In a few hours before he went he had [illegible] philosophical talks and I happened to be the listener.

We were standing on the door step of the First National bank and a train of three of four prairie schooners came along on Tejon street and turned west on Pikes Peak avenue.

'Say lad,' said Rog as he put his arm behind me and rested his hand on my shoulder as is his habit when talking 'do you see those schooners?'

'Yes' I said 'they have pretty good horses for that kind of an outfit.'

'That's what they have' continued Rog and then he went on 'when I was a young lad back in Illinois along about the time that you were born I used to see trains of those things with as many as 200 wagons all crawling along westward, making a few miles a day, plugging through from the middle west to Kansas. That was when they were settling the western part of Kansas. I used to think that the people would all get west pretty soon but I guess I was wrong. They are still moving. How those people who went to Kansas did suffer and starve and work for a mere hope. Some of them did pretty well there as the present character of the state and its people shows but for one who made a success of it how many there were who made nothing. Those who stayed there did well or died. The rest plunged on still farther west or went back. Some of them came clear out here. I suppose those people that just passed are going up Ute pass. Its a queer spirit that gets control of a man when he takes his wife and children and puts them in a wagon like that and starts to roving across the continent. Its an old spirit, though and I expect it will last a good while yet.

'Say' he continued as he started to go up the street 'please don't say anything about my going away until after I've gone. I don't want everybody in town stopping me and asking about it. I'll be back after while.'

A good story is being told by persons familiar with the musical circles especially in the circles involving the Midland band. One night last week there was a little scene in the middle of the concert that caused consternation in the ranks of the spectators. Before the band began the selection one of the musicians informed the director that he did not like the selection and that many of his fellow musicians were of the same opinion. The director said that was the selection announced and that it must be played. The musician said he would not play it and several others said they would not permit it to be played. The director was firm, however, and told the boys to begin. They began the piece and when it had gone a few bars one of the musicians deliberately stopped playing and left the band stand. In a moment another left and within a couple of minutes there were no musicians playing the piece except the two drummers. The director stood pat however and led the drums. Finally the musician who had left first returned and resumed the piece. Then another and another returned and the close of the selection was with full instrumentation and the joke afforded considerable amusement for the spectators.

But the funny part of it was that there is a new band partially organized in Colorado City. It promises to become a thoroughly creditable organization but there is still room for more musicians. One of the members of this new band saw the revolt in the ranks of the Midland and not being in on the game supposed that it was a long file [illegible] and as he was standing around the band stand listening to the drums he walked up to the man who had come down first and said:

'Good George! I am glad to see you do it. Come over with us now and we will organize a good band.'

It is not a particularly kind spirit [illegible] man shows when he laughs at another's misfortune but I saw an accident the other day that I thought was quite funny. I was in a local railroad office where there were several clerks who were busy and one or two who were not. At least it appeared that they were not since one of them was asleep. He was sitting in a chair tipped back against the wall of the room and he was having all sorts of beautiful dreams. At his side there was a table which supported a big letter press. One of the clerks of the night shift took up a report that he had just finished making out and placed it with the usual blotters and rags, etc. In the letter book and walked over to the letter press. He placed the book on the floor of the press and began to turn the wheel. On about the third turn there was a yell that almost shattered the furniture about the room and the general opinion in the office was that the clerk who had been sleeping had been attacked with a nightmare or a day mare or some other kind of a circus attraction. This idea was short-lived however as the clerk jumped to his feet and began cursing the man who was trying to copy the report.

The arm of the sleeping man had been resting on the table back of the letter press and it so happened that a large bunch of biceps had been resting between phlanges of the press.

The arm was not seriously hurt though it will probably be somewhat unnatural in color for a few days.

Where Fires Cannot Be Drowned

Lighting fires deep down in coal mines is a task to put the heroism of the West to the test. In an interesting article on the subject in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for June the author tells how at Plymouth a large town in the Wyoming valley, a big mine caught fire from the burning of a breaker. Some blazing timbers fell down the shaft setting it on fire, and preventing entrance to the mine. The fire burned in the shaft and spread downward and inward. In this case there was but one thing to be done. Great pumps were erected and the river being near water was forced into the mine for months until it was flooded to the bottom of the shaft. Then the water was allowed to remain for some weeks until in the opinion of the officials it had reached every nook and cranny of the mine where fire could have lodged. Then the weary work of pumping it out commenced. It took five months of constant effort by the monster pumps. A couple of months' more work was needed to make repairs and then it was discovered that a large fire burned in the mine many feet below the level the water had reached. This was due to the air and gases generated by the fire holding back the flood of water, a veritable cushion of compressed air and gas. Vent holes had to be bored from the surface to remove this and the weary work of flooding was begun again. It was two years before the mine was in condition to resume operations.

Washington Letter.

(Copyright 1901 Cosmographic Co.) Washington June 1 President McKinley's announcement that he does not want a third term has cleared the political track for 1904. The president's declaration was not a surprise to those who know him intimately, but it was a surprise to those who do not know the habits and methods of the captains and lieutenants of great corporations, men who have only one object in life, namely the amassing of millions. In William McKinley or rather in the politics that he stands for they have found and fully recognize an ideal chief magistrate. The great lines of administration that he has laid down can now be departed from without detriment to the republic. He stands for protection to American industry. Protection we must have the best protection that will enrich not the few but the many. He stands for a reciprocity based on the extension of American commerce, but the honest, honorable natural expansion which Jefferson was the first to inaugurate and which was the spirit and policy of the Democratic party when it was at its best when it was Democratic in fact as well as in name and not a mere annex to socialism. It is natural that the business interests, as they are termed, should desire the retention of other patriotic policies fortified at every point. The reelection of President McKinley would make that certain. But the Washington and Jefferson policies, that to his mind are the indispensable main and that he intends to take care of if he is re-elected, are not the only ones for which his name will be linked with their name, which after all is very nearly the greatest tribute all earthly honors.

And so it has come that the presidential track is clear and the entries for the race are being made. What a splendid array they make. Two candidates come from New York—that is their admirers make them mean that. [illegible] the other Vice President Roosevelt. A year ago Mr. Roosevelt was one of the most popular men in the Republican party but he has not worn well. His ability in many lines is conceded but his eccentricities are of so pronounced a character that long before the nominating year comes around he will cease to be thought of as a presidential possibility. His position as vice president throws him into the shadows of obscurity. Life, the life of action. Not so with Odell. His position as governor of the first of the states gives him a conspicuous place on the political stage, and the part he has already played in it puts his name among the five or six leaders in the hands of one of whom the standard will be placed. Without the strenuous eccentricities of Roosevelt he would be an admirable successor to McKinley. Senator Allison of Iowa is held in high esteem by all who know him but the impression is growing that he is heavily handcapped by age. He will be 72 years old in 1904. Governor Shaw of Iowa is said to be Mr. Allison's choice. While Governor Shaw's record in politics is excellent he is a national introduction and when that is made it will be hard work to acquire in a few years the reputation which the man that carries the nomination for president must possess. Senator Fairbanks of Indiana is about the right presidential age. He will be 42 when the national convention meets, while his colleague Senator Beveridge, who is after their candidate will be exactly 10 years younger. They are both young, but will be seen and have been heard of then.

Three Ohio men are in the field, Mark Hanna, Senator Foraker and Judge Taft, the head of the Philippine commission. The Republican Warwick Hanna of course is the man. A man would make a good president but what convention would dare put him in nomination? Senator Foraker has many elements of strength while Judge Taft is expected to make a good record in Manila that will commend him to the people three years hence. Locality is against all three for the current of opinion runs strong and deep that it is time for Ohio to step aside. As a presidential factor she is an element to be reckoned with, almost beating the record of Virginia. Out in Illinois Senator Mason is booming the non Shelby M. Cullom. He is in the same boat with Mr. Allison as to age, the years of the two combined make nearly a century and a half and they are about equally divided. Away back in the Illinois days it was that in 1867 Mr. Cullom was a presidential elector. Massachusetts has a favorite son in the person of Henry Cabot Lodge. He would make an orator of strong [illegible] forceful. But Mr. Lodge is a closet man. Well does he fill the chair of Charles Sumner, but like Sumner it is very certain that he will miss the presidency. That Philadelphia mayor Ashbridge has within the last couple of days brought the name of John Wanamaker to the front in a presidential point of view is true as a fact in the political pathway of Mr. Wanamaker, the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay. While he lives never an the dry goods merchant get the Pennsylvania vote in a national convention and without that Mr. Wanamaker's candidate is among the impossibilities. Senator John Kean is put forward by the Jersey men. In many respects Mr. Kean is like Mark Hanna, silent, strong, forceful. He inherited millions and has added to them. His family is one of the oldest in his native state, intermarrying with the Fishes and other ancient knickerbocker houses of New York. His home is Liberty Hall near Elizabeth. It was the last stopping place of Washington on his journey to New York to be inaugurated. This is not the full list by any means of the men that are willing to accept the job that President McKinley throws down but [illegible] name for the present.

Mr. C. B. Orcutt the president of the Newport News Shipping company sends tables over the success of the new battleship Illinois. The great ship is indeed an achievement to be proud of. She will be a fortunate day when we can build better ships for war as well as peace than any other country in the world. And we are only in the infancy of the art so to speak. In this line of industry as in all the others we have nothing to learn from Europe.

Short tariff revision at the coming session of congress? The feeling is growing that some changes are needed in many of the schedules and it is very certain that there will be a determined effort to revise the tariff down. No one can close his eyes to the fact that the manufacturers in certain lines are sellers full competing with foreigners in the foreign markets that they are selling goods abroad for less than they realize here. Reports say that the markets disposing of the surplus and that there is no profit in these transactions. Is this report correct? If it is not then the tariff is a curedly too high so far as these industries are concerned and the consequently money is taken out of the pockets of the many to put it into those of the few. The burden falls for the most part on the farmers. It is as essential to conserve their interests as those of the manufacturers.

The new Naval Academy buildings at Annapolis are rapidly approaching completion and will soon be in a condition to be occupied by the cadets. The firm of P. J. Carlin & Co. the builders has a national reputation and the solidity and beauty of the massive structures they have erected are highly praised by naval officers and all who have seen them. By the way the firm was lowest bidder on the foundation for the new custom house in New York but did not get the contract on a mere technicality. It is not improbable that the question will come up before congress at its next session and receive some deserved ventilation. It is asserted that the work now being done is not what it should be and that the substructure is likely to prove defective in many ways.

Continuation of our Round-up Sale of Women's Suits.

Sort of house cleaning, you might say a gathering of our immense stock of women's tailor made suits and pricing them for sudden clearance at Thirty-Three and One-Third Per cent. Discount.

Despite the rapid selling of the past two weeks a good assortment still remains an object lesson, as it were, of the magnitude of our immense spring stock. That the assortment is lower and the styles not so numerous is true, but that is no drawback, the big concessions in price easily overcome that.

Brilliantine Skirts

Separate skirts reach the zenith of popularity this season, along with the shirt waist.

Here is a timely notice of a lot of brilliantine skirts in blue, black, white and grey effects that will add pleasure to the shirt waist fad.

CAPT. COGHLAN LIKES NEWPORT

But Manitou and Colorado Springs Find Better Favor in His Sight Than Any Other Place in the World.

Captain Coghlan likes Newport with its Naval War college and its social gayeties but he likes Colorado Springs and Manitou better. It is since he left Colorado that he has been seen by the greatest of the Eastern writers.

In a letter written to the editor of the Gazette in this city Captain Coghlan says that he has travel the world over and knows of no place he likes Colorado Springs and Manitou better.

Naval War College
Newport R I June 17 1901

My dear Stevens

Time passes so quickly that I wonder the situation of the letter I promised that the first half of the month has slipped by without my hearing from Tivoli. There has been beastly in a way—cool (which I like) but wet either by rain or by fog and consequently disagreeable. It is today its lovely—very much like a winter day about Colorado Springs and Manitou. Newport [illegible] starts in cool and by itself. The beautiful trees lovely roads and streets with their suspicion of dust, make it in a way an ideal place. But of course one misses the pure and exhilarating air of your locality which seems to lift one into a place and of which one never seems to get enough. And then the lat[illegible] though beautifully kept and cultivated and seems to leave one but half satisfied. One sadly misses the grand form of the Utes and their [illegible] with their ever varying shades and shadows.

I find Colorado and its beauties and its health giving air and its [illegible] but little known in the east. Every newspaper in the state which is doing anything worth reading is putting in its shaping that to a vast army of invalids the greatest of all blessings—health—is to be found there. Still at the same time they may be thinking that other small wealth—gold. After experience in some of the very regrettable ways health in such a form is [illegible] young lessons I am [illegible] the strength of my vector things on facts I do so so much that I am beginning to be taken upon—like the man with a grievance—and to be sure I [illegible] until I close to find with the best people I [illegible] trying to get people to share the benefits with me. I [illegible] to get them to go to the Pikes Peak region in the first place. It will pay better to go to the best place without dallying on the way at some other place which they may be told is just as good. I say it is just as good. It is just as good [illegible] to the other place. But really and truly although people can always talk of the West having its own born all the time I find that everyone reports of everything seem to attract visitors by constantly improving roads and driveways and by a perfect system of advertising and that quite extensively. You know western people to very little of the East. No resort in the east allows carriages to be seen by the side walks so that the [illegible] go into the streets or permits a town close to become a disgrace as was the case in Michelle's Manitou while every natural prospect pleases and only the tricks of some man are able to keep even Manitou back at last waked up and is growing as any money trying to make the lock run while making small making the carriages keep in the road. I have traveled the world over and I am truthfully say I know of no place like the Pikes Peak region centered at the Springs. Manitou is indeed that blessed by nature—both for scenery and health—and the fathers and [illegible] prevent its defacement by sordid man.

With kindest regards I am
Sincerely your friend
F E Coghlan

Here is one case of it

Mr Otto Rupp of 416 East Huerfano street says: When I contracted a cold it either weakened or over excited my kidneys and as a result I was annoyed both day and night by too frequent action of the kidney secretions. Reading the [illegible] Pills in our regular cases I procured a box at Jones & Wellington's drug store 109 N Tejon street, and took it. Much to my surprise and more to my gratification I was not only immediately helped but the weakness followed which so often follows excitement of the kidneys passed away.

ANNUAL MEETING OF TUESDAY READING CLUB

The Tuesday Reading club with their friends to the number of 41 held their annual picnic on Tuesday June 18. They went on the Short Line Fairview station where they left the cars and proceeded from foot on foot by hackers up through over a ridge of the mountains until they reached a pleasant glen known as Buffalo park. Florida was reached by Short Line and the continual delight as was evidenced by the chatter and laughter that were heard on every side. At the tiers the picnickers spread their table with which was laden with provisions of various kinds and the hungry crowd did ample justice to the tempting viands spread upon them. After the dinner hour most of the party gathered [illegible] and guessed concerning the whiles [illegible] over the hills and gathered wild flowers and other curiosities in the shape of trees and listened to the murmuring of the brook. At the close of the day the company directed their happy return to Fairview and reached home about 7 o'clock.

PIPES BROKE BUT THE PLAINTIFF PAYS COSTS

Mrs S F Brannon will have to pay the costs of the suit for damages she brought against Herman S Hayman. On the motion of the defendant's attorney in the district court yesterday Judge Seed instructed a jury to find a verdict for the defendants. Mrs Brannon was ordered to pay the costs. The case will be appealed to the court of appeals.

Mrs Brannon rented a room in a house on South Tejon street from Herman S Hayman. Last winter the water pipes in the house froze and burst. Mrs Brannon slipped on the ice in the hallway and broke her leg, hence the suit.

Postoffice Has its Summer Business

There are many evidences of the arrival of summer in Manitou but perhaps the best way to know just the increase in population is to watch the postoffice. In a few days extra summer clerks will be put to work if the rush only one will be engaged until it is so just when it begins the postoffice will have to hustle during the season.

This office jumps up into a good big second class office during the summer time. Postmaster Grafton is trying to get one of the largest second class offices in the country too. There are so many people here and they are so generally moving around that the office should be manned by a business man who would be able to look after the forwarding book and the letters. I am allowed so much help by the government and if it is necessary to hire more clerks than I can get for that money it has to come out of my own pocket.

We have many foreign letters to [illegible] and [illegible] people who were during the day at this office. Most of the people have their mail sent to the general delivery window and they seem to think we should remember their faces. They ask us everything under the sun from the time of day to the price of real estate and seem offended if we do not know everything in the city. We have a number of signs on the walls asking people to refrain from spitting on the floor, telling them the time of arriving and departing trains, where to find the depot and other matters of general knowledge and then people will come to the window and ask all these questions over and over again.

Mrs H A Rose who has been in the postoffice here for a number of years as will again occupy that position after July 1 and that is all the extra help I will get on until I can determine about how many thousand pieces of mail we will have to handle a day.

COG ROAD NOW HAS FIVE ENGINES

The new engine recently received by the Cog road is now in order and will be put into commission as soon as a few trial trips have been made to break the new locomotive in. Workmen have been busy with it for the past two or three days or ever since the engine has been on the tracks and the finishing touches were put on it last night. A fire was built in the fire box as soon as the last bolt had been put in place and the engine run up into the shops. This makes five locomotives owned by the Cog road and with this new one the road will be able this year to handle the large summer trade which is already beginning to be noticeable.

The hotel on the summit of the peak has the distinction of being the highest hostelry in the world and it is not as poor a place to stay as people would imagine. The building is now two stories in height containing a lunch counter, curio store and sleeping rooms. The tower on the top of the hotel will be completed by the last of next week and from it tourists may obtain a view in the centre of the surrounding towns and ranges. The Cog road is having a book printed describing the road. It was to have been distributed some time ago but a number of typographical errors made it impossible to send the book out until they were corrected.

MORELAND'S SHOW IS TO GIVE PERFORMANCE

The great Double American Dog and Pony Show and Animal Actors of which W H Moreland is manager has been in Manitou some time and yesterday the tents were put up so that the animals could have some place to sleep and to exercise. Mr Moreland said yesterday that the show would give an exhibition in Manitou in about 10 days before starting on a trip through Colorado and that he would guarantee that it was the best show of its size in existence.

"We do not pretend to fuck Gentry's show," said Mr Moreland, "and we don't charge the prices they do but what we have got is the best in the country and we can please the people as well as Gentry can because we have some acts that have never been given by any other large open show and our animals, ponies, dogs, monkeys and all are the finest in the land."

The tents have been pitched just west of the Rio Grande tracks on the vacant lot there and they make a very creditable appearance.

AT EMMA CRAWFORD'S GRAVE

The following lines were written at Emma Crawford's grave on the top of Red mountain by Frank A Marshall of the Kansas City Journal:

Thou steepest sod! oh sleeper when I kneel
Let in thy stay I fritely and
I drop my tear upon thy pillow strew
My flowers upon thy bridal bed. The great
Of earth hid neer sarcophagus like thine—
Then mountains carve in wondrous heraldry
In heaven's mighty chisel and thy shrine
The [illegible] as spotless as thy soul the bloom
Of sweet remembrant flowers like these I lay
This fair June time—What grander requiem
Than God's great diapason of his peaks
While sweep it runs from sob to song?
What pomp
Is like this vast cathedral of the sky?
What cense is like the pines? What eulogy
Were like these stars that glisten as with tears
By strangers laid with sighs above thy sleep?
Ah sweet as violets the dream that died
With thee. Thy thought up in a gentler bed
To lie that orange bloom would wreathe thy brow
Thou dreamed a touch less hard than even the snow
[illegible] the end is here—
This stone that bears thy name. The end? Ah no
Thy dream shall live when mountains are but dust
And when the final shine and snow have pall'd
Their tribute to thy rest. Thy story then
Shall it begin—against that telling sweet
I give thee place. Oh sleeper give thee rest—
The peace of mountain snow and sun, and God

ALL NIGHT CENTRAL—Beginning last night the Manitou central telephone office inaugurated an all night service and any Manitou number may be called at any time during the night. Miss Vidi Taylor has charge of the night central.

The Colorado Pharmical association held its [illegible] meeting at the Cliff house Manitou the past week. In point of numbers the affair was a disappointment. Many who desired very much to attend were prevented by illness or bereavement. Still all in attendance voted it a most enjoyable outing.

Mr and Mrs Charles M Ford presidents respectively of the association and of The Silent Partners a social organization of the female relatives of the members were absent. In Denver the ladies of the last named association hold fortnightly afternoon meetings and once a month they entertain the gentlemen in the evening. During these sessions at Manitou they played card parties were given and handsome prizes were awarded.

Mr and Mrs C A Pollen are expected home from the east this week. During their absence of several weeks they have been the guests of Mr and Mrs Joseph Greene formerly of Manitou now residents of Providence R I. Mr and Mrs Pollen spent some days in New York Philadelphia and Atlantic City. Also tarried both going and coming at the Panamerican exposition at Buffalo.

Mrs Charles A Grant accompanied her son Mr Lester S Grant and wife on their return to their home in Cripple Creek yesterday and will visit with them for several days.

THE NEWS OF COLORADO CITY

GAZETTE'S BRANCH OFFICE:
N. K. Rankin's Coal office, 513 Colorado Avenue.

Great Activity in Building Circles

Every passenger to Colorado City on the street cars or trains can not fail to notice the great amount of building work going on all over the city at this time. East, west, north and south the buildings are going up on every hand and there are a number of handsome blocks being built in the center of the city which would do credit to a good deal larger place.

It seems as if every one in the city is building a new [illegible] building of some kind and real estate [illegible] every since there has been a city, say that never has there been as much building as at present. The reasons for this activity are many. In the first place the new smelter, together with the old mill and the Midland shops furnish ample employment for some 1,500 persons and the revenue thus put in circulation is enough to run the town for years to come. Colorado City now has a liberal and just city government. There is no disorder and the arrests have been few and far between for the past three or four months. The present administration is conducting a good, clean town—clean in reality as well as in suggestion and it is having its reward.

It is safe to say that the amount of building now going on in the city involves an expenditure on the part of the builders of at least $175,000, which is no small sum to be involved in building operations at one time in a city of less than 5,000 population. A list of a portion of the houses which are being built with their approximate cost is given below:

F. J. Macks, residence, Colorado avenue, $2,000.

F. H. Faist, residence, Lincoln avenue, $2,000.

William Miller, residence, Colorado avenue, $2,000.

Dr. Winternitz, residence, Colorado avenue, $2,000.

Mrs. Woodward, residence, Colorado avenue, $1,000.

O. H. Miller, three cottages, Jefferson avenue, $1,500.

Frank Dubbs, residence, Jefferson avenue, $1,000.

J. J. Goth, addition, Fourth street, $1,000.

H. B. Wescott, two cottages, Jackson avenue, $2,000.

Ernest Wescott, business block, Colorado avenue, $3,000.

J. J. Fairbanks, laundry, Colorado avenue, $2,000.

John Neswinter, business block, Colorado avenue, $1,000.

[illegible] avenue, $1,500.

Methodist church, corner Third and Lincoln, $10,000.

Methodist parsonage, Third street, $1,200.

William Parker, residence, Jefferson avenue, $1,500.

J. W. Walker, residence, Jackson avenue, $2,500.

Sophia M. Seaport, residence, Jefferson avenue, $1,500.

H. A. Workman, residence, Jefferson avenue, $1,600.

N. Z. Reed, business block, Colorado avenue, $10,000.

Whittier School building, Tenth street, $22,000.

School in east part of town, Rustic Home, $2,000.

Isaac Kissell, residence, Colorado avenue, $2,500.

J. H. Nelson, residence, Colorado avenue, $2,500.

Besides the above there are many in other portions of the city which are too numerous to mention. The number and cost of these may be summed up as followed with a great degree of accuracy:

La Verne, twelve houses, cost $10,000.

Rustic Home addition, eight houses, cost $5,000.

West end houses in construction, cost $15,000.

South side houses in construction, cost $5,000.

Total cost of buildings, $151,000.

Mrs. O'Neill Was Attacked on Street

As stated in yesterday morning's Gazette there was a rumor about town that a prominent young married lady of the city had been waylaid in West Colorado Springs Thursday night. Yesterday the rumor was in a measure confirmed although the facts as circulated are not in accordance with the real facts in the case. The lady in question was Mrs. C. [illegible] O'Neill, and she was struck a [illegible] blow about eight o'clock Friday night while returning from a visit with some friends in La Verne. She was knocked down [illegible] but not badly injured.

"I had been in La Verne visiting some of my friends," said Mrs. O'Neill, in speaking of the accident, "and started home about 7:30 in the evening alone. When I got under the trees on the north side of the sidewalk in front of Sheldon's place I noticed that a man was following me and I [illegible] to let him pass. He came up to me and without saying a [illegible] any warning, he struck me across the right temple with a stick. The blow knocked me down and the man who had struck me jumped over the fence and ran north. I did not notice whether he was white or colored, it all happened so quickly, but he was a large man and I noticed his hat in particular.

"As soon as he was gone I ran home and later went to the doctor. With the exception of a black and blue spot across my face I am unhurt. The man, whoever he was, did not stop to rob me or otherwise have me and I cannot see a motive for the assault."

Mrs. O'Neill lived on Colorado avenue between Second and Third streets. Her home is very near to the house of her friend whom she was visiting and for that reason she felt no timidity at going home alone. The description of the man, as well as Mrs. O'Neill could give it, has been given to the police and they are working on the case.

DR. W. I. ELLISON,

Colorado Springs' successful Lung, Throat and Chronic Disease Specialist, devotes his entire professional time to the special treatment of Consumption, Asthma, Catarrh, Hay Fever and Chronic Diseases of Men, Women and Children. Author of the Attenuated Sulphur Treatment for Consumption of the Lungs and Throat. This treatment can be taken at your home. If you cannot come to the office, write. Examination free. Office, 24 North Tejon Street.

Dr. Ellison treats Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Hay Fever and the Chronic Diseases common to men, women and children as a specialty, and devotes all his professional time exclusively to this class of practice. In every vocation specialty work is now called for and demanded. This is notably true when life and health are at stake. It is upon that the best medical service the profession affords should be procured. This is only possible when you employ the physician who has attained professional skill by concentrating persistent investigation concerning the care and treatment of certain diseases. If you suffer from acute disease, call your family physician; if you suffer from any chronic disease, consult Dr. Ellison. In the past three years, nearly two thousand tubercular lung and throat cases have been under treatment by his attenuated sulphur treatment, with a death rate of only four, as an examination of the city records will prove. Those who cannot call should write. The sulphur treatment for consumption of the lungs or throat can be taken at your home. The doctor gives consultation and examination free at the office every day. Office, 24 North Tejon street (over Craigue's grocery store), where the doctor can be found mornings from 9 to 12, afternoons from 2 to 5, evenings from 7 to 8 o'clock, and Sundays from 2 to 3 p. m.

To Arrange Details for Glorious Fourth

The Chamber of Commerce will meet in the council chamber of the city hall tomorrow night, at which meeting the reports of the various Fourth of July committees will be made. The chamber has not had a meeting for the past month as President Boyle has been out of the city and the committees had not proceeded with the work far enough to make reports.

The plans for the celebrations have been almost completed and each committee is now working hard to make the affair a success. The large posters which were printed some time ago have been sent to the principal cities in the state by the advertising committee and there is every reason to believe that from 8,000 to 12,000 people will be in Colorado City on the Fourth. The next meeting of the committee on general arrangements will be held next Tuesday evening at which time the order of parade and minor details of the celebration will be determined upon.

LE FEVRES PAID WELL FOR THEIR GUN PLAY

The business in police court yesterday was in direct contrast with that of the previous week. In all 11 prisoners lined up before Judge Hatch when court was convened. Seven of them were tags which were gathered up on the round-up Friday afternoon, two were drunks arrested on Colorado avenue by Chief Birdsall Friday evening and the other two were charged with disturbance. The drunks and tags [illegible] the usual fine and are now working for the city.

The two men who were charged with disturbance were James E. and L. A. La Fevre of Pueblo, who took some shots at the proprietor of the shooting gallery on Colorado avenue, Mr. Hotchkiss. The latter declined to appear against them, saying that they would receive a heavy enough fine in police court and that he had no desire to carry it further. James E. was fined $10 and costs and his brother was assessed $5 and costs. Each of the brothers had a return ticket to Pueblo and they were allowed to depart upon the promise that they would stay out of town.

EAGLES WILL HAVE [illegible]

The local aerie of Eagles will hold an important meeting tonight, at which time about six applications will be acted upon and a number of important questions will be considered by the lodge.

Some time ago the proposition of attending the Denver street fair, which will be conducted by the Fraternal Order of Eagles was brought before the lodge, but was not considered favorably because of the expense of taking a band and hiring an extra train would be too great. It was then thought advisable to have an outing of some kind for the local aerie and the nature of the outing will be decided upon at tonight's meeting. A number of propositions have been made, but the Woodland Park outing is receiving the most favorable talk. It is the plan to go to Woodland for a day's outing on a special train and take provisions and refreshments along. In this way the money will not all be to a railroad company, but will be kept at home and will be a benefit to the merchants of the city as well as giving the lodge [illegible] outing.

GAZETTE'S BASEBALL BULLETIN SERVICE

Arrangements have been made whereby the bulletins of the Colorado Springs baseball games will be posted at the Gazette's branch office, N. K. Rankin's coal office, [illegible] beginning with the team is at home or in the east. The number of hits, errors and the batteries of each team will be posted as soon after the game as possible.

In addition to the bulletins of the Colorado Springs games, the games between other Western League teams will be posted as soon after the game as they are received so that before 5:30 o'clock the Colorado City admirers of the game may know the results of every game in the western league.

Watch the bulletin board.

BAND—The Colorado City band is rapidly rounding into shape and by the Fourth of July, when they will make their first appearance in public, it will be hard to beat. Practices are held every Tuesday and Friday nights in the city hall.

BURNETT-HACKMAN—Married at the Baptist parsonage by Rev. W. H. Powell, Mr. W. J. Burnett and Miss Sophia C. Hackman. Both parties are well known in this city and have many friends who wish them a smooth journey through life.

FUNERAL—The funeral services over the remains of Harold, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Walker were held from the family residence yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the presence of many friends of the family. The interment was in Crystal Valley cemetery, in Manitou.

ARCADES VS. ROCKY FORD—The Rocky Ford team will arrive in the city this morning for the game with the Arcades, which will be played on Myers park this afternoon. Both teams are determined to win and a good game will be the result.

HIBERNIANS—The Ancient Order of Hibernians will meet in St. Mary's hall this afternoon at 3 o'clock for the purpose of attending services at the Catholic church in a body. Bishop Matz of Denver will administer the rites of confirmation to a class, after which he will perform the ceremony of blessing the bell of the church.

NEW OFFICERS—The Baptist Young People's union met recently and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Miss Mollie Loyd; vice president, George Ford; secretary, Mabel Willis; treasurer, Miss Ressie Griffin. The committee which will have charge of the different branches of the society's work will be appointed later by the president.

COTTON—The cotton continues to fly with as much freedom as if this were the land of cotton. [illegible] inexhaustible, and the residents have nothing to do but hope and pray that the nuisance will soon be over. On newly painted buildings the cotton has collected until they resemble Christmas chromos.
